Comment Of The Day

A new republic

THE outcome in the South African referendum may convince Dr Verwoerd's Nationalists that the majority prefer a republic to dominion status, but both the narrowness of the voting and the fact that only about one-sixth of the population participated, make it a hollow victory indeed.

More than 1.7 million mixed race and Asian people, and about 9 million Bantu were simply bystanders with no say in the political evolution of their country, and the world wonders how their cause has been affected.

In recent years Dr Verwoerd has found little difficulty in skirting the legal restrictions of the South Africa Act known as the Entrenched Provisions. The advantages of republicanism beyond giving fulfilment to an old Afrikaner dream, are thus not obvious.

South Africa has never allowed its Commonwealth ties to interfere with objectionable or discriminatory policies and perhaps the only significance of the referendum is that it has now formalised its severance from the Crown.

FROM the British point of view, South Africa's decision will be regretted. The anti-republican vote is indicative of the large pro-British element in the population.

Great Englishmen like Cecil Rhodes have been associated with the land and its development. Its history is equally a story which British lives have enriched and out of the war with the Boers at the turn of the century came a self-government eight years later.

By voting in a republic the disgruntled Afrikaners may feel that they have achieved peacefully what their ancestors failed to do by force of arms 60 years before. But outweighing any consolations are the deepening divisions and strains in the population that a republic must cause.

South Africa's future with the Commonwealth must now be decided by the Commonwealth. The risks of turning a republic were known to Dr Verwoerd and there can be no complaint if the majority feel that unity would be best preserved with South Africa out.

THE only regret Britain will have in this event is that it will be permanently severing ties with the anti-republicans, the coloured and the Bantu people—in fact the vast majority of South Africans. For this reason alone it is to be hoped the new republic, like India, Pakistan and Ghana, is admitted.

Drama on the Rhine

Emmerich, Germany, Oct. 7.

One person was killed, two were missing, 10 were seriously and 15 slightly injured as a result of a ship collision today on the Rhine River setting nine vessels afire, police said.

The drama on the Rhine, Europe's busiest waterway, began with the collision between the Danish 1,800-ton ferry boat Tina Searlet and the Belgian 585-ton tank barge Diamant, of Antwerp.

Kerosene aboard the Diamant caught fire and the subsequent blaze quickly engulfed seven other vessels which, like the Diamant, were tied up in this inland port on the Dutch-German border.—AP.

London, Oct. 7. International radio and telephone communications were disrupted for the second day running in many parts of the world today owing to severe magnetic storms in the ionosphere.—Reuter.

'VITAL FOR THE PARTY TO REVERSE DECISION'

Hugh Gaitskell speaks out

London, Oct. 7. Mr Hugh Gaitskell said in a television interview tonight that it was "absolutely vital" to reverse at next year's Labour Party conference, the defence decisions reached at this week's conference.

The Party leader, speaking on an Associated Rediffusion Network programme, added: "I don't want to be over confident, but I believe that it can be reversed and will be reversed."

All those people who do not want us to go it alone, and be defenceless, do their job and see to it that at next year's conference we get a vote in favour of our traditional policies."

Mr Gaitskell was commenting on the victory of the "Ban the Bomb" rebels in persuading the Party conference on Wednesday to vote for a policy of unilateral nuclear disarmament by Britain.

He said: "If it were to be a permanent decision, I would take a rather grave view of this. It would have a very bad effect on morale in the west if a great party like ours were to go neutralist and want to get out of NATO."

"But, as I say, that has not happened yet, and I hope it's not going to happen."—Reuter.

Wants 'equality' for Communists and Neutralists in UN

United Nations, Oct. 7.

Mr Nikita S. Khrushchev said today the Soviet Union will uphold its interests outside the United Nations "by force" unless Communist and neutral states are given "equality" in the world organisation.

The Soviet leader told the UN Correspondents Association that Russia would not accept Dag Hammarskjöld as Secretary-General, even if 88 per cent of the UN members voted for him.

In his demand for Mr Hammarskjöld's replacement by a three-man presidium—one each from the Communist, Neutralist and Western countries—he said, he was only asking for "just rights."

(In his reference to "force," Khrushchev used the Russian word "Sila" which is translated either as strength or force. His official interpreter at the lunch used the word "force.")

(Russian-speaking correspondents who also were present believed he might have used it to mean the Soviet Union would "rely on our own strength.")

"If you want to subordinate us without giving us what we deserve," he said, "we will merely uphold our position outside this organisation by means of force and this will simply worsen the situation."

"You may not arrive at the correct decision today, but I entertain high hopes for tomorrow."

Answering questions for an hour and 42 minutes, Mr Khrushchev told the newsmen:

Peace treaty

Prime Minister Harold Macmillan assured him in private talks that there would be a summit conference next year after the U.S. election. The summit would be convened to discuss a peace treaty with Germany and the conversion of West Berlin into a free city, he said.

Russia would stand by its pledge not to force the German issue by signing a separate peace treaty with East Germany if there is agreement to hold a summit session.

In return, Mr Khrushchev proposed a special session of the General Assembly to be held between next February and April, perhaps in Moscow or Leningrad, to discuss only the question of disarmament.

The current Assembly session, of the "hindrance" of the US Presidential election, which means that "the United States cannot actively participate in solving all the important questions" before it.

World tension

Mr Macmillan favoured a delay of "five or ten" years on the disarmament question to permit world tension to cool, and then wanted to give the problem to a committee of experts "and let them move ahead as a small would move."

Russia, Mr Khrushchev said, insisted on going ahead now with disarmament "under international control" to prevent the spread of nuclear arms and missiles and the entry of more countries into the armaments race.

Lumumba's bid for power scotched

Leopoldville, Oct. 7. Colonel Joseph Mobutu, the Congolese military leader, today scotched an attempt by Mr Patrice Lumumba to form a new government by arresting 12 Congolese supporters of it and declaring it invalid.

The new government list included two of Mr Lumumba's rivals Mr Jean Balukongo and Mr Albert Kalonji—both federalists who afterwards said they knew nothing about it.

Mr Justin Bomboko, Foreign Minister in Mr Lumumba's first government, Mr Joseph Iléo, the rival premier and Moïse Tshombe, Premier of Katanga, were excluded.

HANDCUFFS

The new government was announced by a paper "handcuffed" this morning. Shortly afterwards Mr Maurice Mpolo, Mr Lumumba's new defence minister and an increasingly important person in Mr Lumumba's party, gave a press conference.

When it was over, Colonel Mobutu's men arrived in trucks and led off 12 supporters in handcuffs. Diplomats following Congolese affairs saw today's events as a sign of a weakening of Mr Lumumba's hold on the reins of power. But Mr Lumumba is still occupying the Premier's residence and showing no signs of planning to leave either it or his claims to the Premiership.—Reuter.

SMALLPOX SCARE

AIRLINER RETURNED TO HONGKONG

London, Oct. 7.

A Boac Comet which flew a passenger to London on Monday suffering from smallpox has since flown other passengers to Hongkong and arrived back in London today with more passengers.

The Hongkong health authorities have been told about this.

[A Boac spokesman said in Hongkong this morning that before leaving London for Hongkong the Comet would, as a matter of routine, have had its linen changed and its interior sprayed with disinfectant, so that there would have been little chance of it carrying any infection out of London or of its passengers coming into contact with any infection on the plane.]

The smallpox victim was Dutchman Mr L. Perk Vlaanderen who boarded the plane at Kuala Lumpur and is now in an isolation hospital at Dartford, near London. He is thought to have come from Singapore originally.

His condition is said to be satisfactory and his infection "reasonably under control."

Fumigated

Today the the Comet aircraft which brought Mr Vlaanderen arrived back in London from Hongkong and was immediately fumigated and all linen blankets and seat covers were changed.

A Reuter report said that incoming passengers were passing through the London airport controls normally, but it did not say whether any specific precautions had been taken with passengers on the Comet from Hongkong.

Meanwhile Health authorities in London are still trying to trace eleven passengers who were on the Comet which brought the man suffering from smallpox to London.

These include two Hongkong passengers, identified as Chan Kwok-son, a woman and a A. T. J. Hutchinson.

The eleven passengers who have still not been traced are being sought, according to a Ministry of Health spokesman, "not because they are in great danger but as a safety precaution."

A medical officer said today "although it is felt that the risk of infection is slight every effort is being made to trace all contacts so that they may be offered vaccination and kept under observation."

Dr P. R. Cooper, Chief Medical Officer of Health at the airport and his staff have been working night and day to vaccinate ground staff. "They have been hard at it ever since the case was discovered," an airport official said.

There were queues today at London Airport medical centres where airline girls, customs officers, airport policemen and other ground staff and their families were being vaccinated. "We have not not been so busy for years," said one medical officer.—Reuter.

Verwoerd predicts A REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA IN 8 MONTHS

Pretoria, Oct. 7.

Dr Hendrik Verwoerd, the South African Prime Minister, said in a radio broadcast tonight that the decision in this week's referendum to make the country a republic "is clearly final."

Dr Verwoerd said "within eight months, the ideal of a republic will be fulfilled."

He hinted that Parliament might decide that May 31—Union Day—might be a suitable date for "the birth of the Republic."

Dr Verwoerd said he hoped English-speaking South Africans would form a Conservative Party with policies similar to those of his own Nationalist movement.

Dr Verwoerd said that a special session of Parliament would not be called since it was meeting in any case in about three months time and "there is much to be done."

"Attention must be given to matters relating to the external relations of the new state, including that of her relations with the Commonwealth," he said.

"The time needed for this will, it is hoped, be utilised for adjustments to the new situation by everybody concerned."

FILMS CURRENT & COMING by ANTHONY FULLER

"CONSPIRACY OF HEARTS" (Lee & Astor) is a rich and emotional experience, yet an uplifting one, in which you, as a member of the audience, take a vicarious participation in human suffering and human greatness.

Let me say quite frankly, it will be difficult to hold back the tears, but why try? There is no shame in tears shed for another, and at the time this tale was first told, there were few near enough at hand to shed tears.

So "Conspiracy of Hearts" in its simplest terms, is the story of a group of devoted nuns in Italy, who rescued children from a Nazi operated concentration camp.

The fact that the nuns were Catholics, and that the children were Jewish, adds a wonderful lustre to this story which brought a wonderful heaven to those dark days.

There are heart stopping sequences; the track which is examined while the children hide under a load of melons; the mystery of why the children refuse to eat until one of them explains that it is Yom Kippur.

The moment of fear as joy turns to terror, when the soldiers burst in upon the ceremony.

But in urging you to see this film, I express a view that is far beyond the qualities of an exceptionally well made picture. For the message of "Conspiracy of Hearts" is of a vast and compelling significance. When I ask, was there a greater lack of trust and international dishonesty which could bring again to a war-torn generation, all the filthy business of racial intolerance. Two of the cast are well known in Hongkong. Fulmer, who portrays the role of the Mother Superior with rare dignity and grace. And Sylvia Syms, who introduced herself to us when she was out here filming.

Ronald Lewis is great as the Italian officer, Albert Lloven as the German Colonel, while Yvonne Mitchell, Megs Jenkins, and Nora Swinburne, are excellent in their character studies of nuns.

A work for David Kosoff as the rabbi and Michael Goodliffe as the Chaplain to the Convent. I cannot say any more. "Conspiracy of Hearts" is a study in fine entertainment, which at the same time conveys a high aspiration of humanity.

"THE DEVIL'S CAVALIERS" (Broadway) is the Continental film. "Cavaliere del Diavolo" big screen and Eastman color epic starring Gianna Maria Canale. Before D'Artagnan and his gallant band was Richard, the Devil's knight, or so this film would have us believe, and he too had a gallant band of four brave dashing resolute, and faithful knights.

The film concerns itself with the reign of Henry II of France, or to be more explicit, the real ruler, his wife, Catherine of Medici.

This delightful women who settled religious disputes with a fine sense of proportion, ending in the fearful Massacre of St Bartholomew, was, at the time of this film, making things rather hot for the Huguenots in the Southern district of France.

Dauphine, the Duke of Vars, tried to exploit the situation in his town and make himself master of the region, and also to marry the beautiful Louise de Valency in the bargain.

Which introduces our gallant hero known as the Devil's Knights.

The handsome Richard wanted only to live in peace and retirement in Paris, having had his fill of wars, but duty, stern duty decides.

As Col. Horstan chooses which nuns are to be shot a silent group watches from the chapel doorway: Major Spalotti (RONALD LEWIS) Father Desmaignes (MICHAEL GOODLIFFE), Lt. Schmidt (PETER ARNE) Sister Tia (NORA SWINBURNE) and Sister Elisaveta (PHYLLIS NEILSON - TERRY). Conspiracy of Hearts. Lee & Astor.

So here is a big colourful romance, which will take you galloping right out of Hongkong to old France when men were gentlemen and gallant to boot, and fair ladies were exceedingly fair in love. If not in war.

It is a stupendous crowd pleaser, with clashes of arms, brave encounters, and derring-do galore.

Of course, there are intrigues in my lady's chamber.

Gianna Maria Canale is well known to us in Hongkong from other episodes of spectacular history, and the leading cast also includes Frank Latimore, Emma Daniel, and Gabriella Pallotta.

"THE RAT RACE" (King's & Princess)

is one of these films which lifts the lid off the great glowing metropolis, and shows the country cousins just what life is like when lived in the modern counterparts of the "Cities of the Plain."

The film is a generous mixture of all the cynical attributes of modern life in big cities (and small ones come to that) and the tale is told through the eyes of naive Tony Curtis, who is innocent enough to think that ability will get him to the top, and Debbie Reynolds who knows all the answers and then some.

For Debbie is the voice of experience. She has been around in New York for two years, nursing the illusion that a pretty face, a trim figure, and some ability, is all that a good girl requires to get her name in lights along the big bright way.

But in two years she has learned a lot. For all she does is stand along the side-line in dance halls where she is grabbed for a dance by any oaf who has a dime to put down.

As "The Rat Race" suggests, there is no particular villain involved in a personal sense, but rather the circumstances created by multiple villainy nourished to the heart of a great city.

Obviously, experience and inexperience meet up, but inexperienced Tony Curtis refuses to listen to Miss Reynolds, and soon he has hooked every portable item in his wardrobe, to say nothing of his sixophone with which he intended to blow him millions of dollars.

Well, in this city, and any other city come to that, there is only one way a talented girl can make quick easy money. The question is, will Miss Reynolds take her eyes off the great white way and turn them towards the only way.

The result is an interesting film, entertaining always, where the great white way is really a pure way, and the slough of despond merely a Broadway gimmick. With two popular stars as Tony Curtis and Debbie Reynolds, the film is half way home already.

"THE COSSACKS"

(Hoover & Gala) is an Eastman color & Total-scope Italian made film, of broad backgrounds, vast battle scenes, and sweeping vistas.

It is the story of a war between the Cossack tribesmen and the soldiers of Czar Alexander II of Russia during the period 1850 to 1860.

The story is well developed, and commences at a stage when Czarist incessant war against Czarism is brought to a halt when his son, Barrymore, is taken as a hostage.

Young Barrymore is brought up as a Cossack, becomes a Cossack and falls in love with a Russian Princess. He goes a bit further, and saves the Czar's life, and when his father gets to hear about it, he is convinced that his son is a traitor to the Cossack cause.

Obviously such a film with its tale of cross purposes and lost causes offers full scope to a movie maker. But unfortunately, the film stops now and again while the director suggests you see what a clever chap he is.

NEW FILMS AT A GLANCE

SHOWING

ROXY & MAJESTIC: "Let's Make Love." CinemaScope and colour comedy about how a millionaire courted Marilyn Monroe by pretending to be a poor man. Amusing, smart, and sleek show. Marilyn Monroe, Yves Montand, Tony Randall, and Frankie Vaughan.

HOOVER & GALA: "The Cossacks." Giant spectacular film, concerned with France under the thumb of Catherine of Medici. Huge screen and colour costume spectacle. Gianna Maria Canale and Frank Latimore.

KING'S & PRINCESS: "The Rat Race." All about innocence (Tony Curtis) and experience (Debbie Reynolds) in the New York show business. Snappy, smart, cynical, sophisticated picture.

LEE & ASTOR: "Conspiracy of Hearts." World War II melodrama, set in Northern Italy, concerns a Mother Superior who defies the Nazis and converts her convent into a clearing house for refugee children. First rate acting, compelling story, with some wry humour. Rated Excellent in both the States and Britain. Lilli Palmer, Sylvia Syms, and Richard Lewis.

COMING

ROXY & MAJESTIC: "Murder Incorporated." Grim semi-documentary about an institution which kills for cash. Very well made film on an evil theme. Stuart Whitman and May Britt.

HOOVER & GALA: "The Subterraneans." CinemaScope and colour MGM film, starring Leanne Caron and George Peppard, an Arthur Freed Production, directed and written by Rianald MacDougal.

ROXY & STATE: "Kidnapped." Technicolor 18th century adventure melodrama, based on R. L. Stevenson's classic. Magnificent family film. Peter Fink, James MacArthur, and Bernard Lee.

The film is dubbed in parts, for most of the actors are Italians, but you will know Edmund Purdom and John Drew Barrymore, and maybe you will recognise Georgia Moll from one or two earlier films of this type.

Colour, action, spectacle, are the three great attractions of this film.

"THE LAST BETRAYAL"

(Capitol) is a DaisScope and colour Japanese film, which tells the story of Tsumura, a prisoner who breaks out to visit his lady love, the owner of the Madonna Bar.

We do not have to wait long before the story unravels its sordid message which is the old message. That drink, crime, informers, vice, are bed fellows in both the metaphorical and literal sense, and that the best one can expect is not to be betrayed by the companion of the night before.

But Tsumura has been betrayed, and finds evidence of his betrayal in his lover's bed chamber, and there begins his sorrow.

So this sordid saga runs its full length, with its story of sordid love affairs, treachery, cunning and vice, to be ended by a revolver and the violent death of the "hero."

Once again, crime does not pay.

 Fifteen political prisoners escaped from Morro castle prison today in a pre-dawn mass jail break from the old Spanish fortress.

German troops may train in France

 Bonn, Oct. 7.
 Four battalions of West German troops may start training in the Rhine area of France in November, informed sources said here today.

They would be the first German troops—apart from Nato staff—to enter France in uniform since World War Two.

The sources said France had offered the training facilities because of an extreme lack of space in West Germany, a final agreement on the matter was yet to be concluded.

The agreement would form an advance part of an overall agreement on military depots and training facilities for the West German forces in France, which has been under negotiation for several months.—Reuter.

Warning to dog owners

 London, Oct. 7.
 The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food tonight issued an urgent warning to dog owners about a buyer from Japan distributing an "anti-rabies vaccine" in Britain.

The announcement said "the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food understands that a buyer from Japan is in this country distributing a substance described as an anti-rabies vaccine to be administered to dogs which he is purchasing for export."

"This practice is illegal and could be highly dangerous."

"Any person who has been or is approached in this way is asked to get in touch without delay with the Ministry." No further details were given.—Reuter.

Frenchman opposing military service in Algeria arrested

 Geneva, Oct. 7.
 Francis Jeanson, leader of a French organisation opposing military service in Algeria, was arrested in Geneva yesterday, police reported today.

His girl friend, Cecile Regagnon, was with him and was also arrested, reliable sources said.

Jeanson, chief of a propaganda network attempting to discourage young Frenchmen from doing military service in the strife-torn North African area, arrived here yesterday morning, a hunted man, hollow-cheeked, hungry and with no money.

SENTENCED

He crossed into Geneva from France where he spent the last three weeks under cover, the French police on his trail.

Jeanson and Cecile were tried in absentia by a French court which sentenced them to 10 years imprisonment for plotting against French state security.

Jeanson was expelled and banned from Switzerland in August for anti-French statements he made in a news conference in Geneva.—AP.

 Perth, Oct. 7.
 Seafaring Scots brothers, Chief Officer James Harper and Captain Alexander Harper, of Ardrossan, have met by coincidence at Fremantle for the first time in seven years.

Captain Harper, master of the newly-commissioned B & S freighter Kwangai was reading the paper when he saw that the freighter Scottish Monarch with his youngest brother James aboard as chief officer, was due to arrive at Fremantle on October 3—the 50th anniversary of their parents' wedding.

When the Scottish Monarch arrived in the Harbour, Captain Harper went out to meet his brother in one of the Kwangai's lifeboats, and that night they Russia will put a man into orbit around the world, when conditions have been mastered to safeguard his return. When that will be, he said, he did not know. The Soviet Union is ready to co-operate in a U.N. effort to control outer space "if our desires are met." He said the United States wanted to "command" space, and added, "so you (Americans) take command of it and we will, too." Russia has given "de facto" recognition to the Algerian revolution, but French President Charles De Gaulle has done the same thing by negotiating with Algerian rebels. The Soviet Union, he said, will "always render them the utmost aid possible which will be useful to them in attaining their freedom."

Russia professes to wait until disarmament is attained before increasing its assistance to underdeveloped countries. As far as Western aid to such areas is concerned, he said, "capitalism cannot, by its very essence, render any assistance, because it runs counter to the capitalist system."

Mr. Khrushchev's replies were interpreted by one of his official interpreters, Victor Sukhodrev, who holds the rank of second secretary in the Soviet Diplomatic Service.

Asked whether he would agree to Mr. Hammarskjold remaining as Secretary-General if two-thirds of the General Assembly voted for that, Khrushchev said:

"Even if a majority were 99 per cent, we would not accept such a decision. The two-thirds majority principle is all very well indeed and it is all right for solving internal matters. We adhere to that policy inside our country."

"But here we have to deal with international issues. This is not a parliament. It is a forum in which the questions have to be resolved. Imagine if the representative of the United Nations were to be possessed of such an ideal thought as to take a decision to eliminate that socialist system in the Soviet Union. Even if all voted for in except ourselves, would it change anything? We would simply say: Get out with your decision!"—UPI.

On Algeria

 Grenoble, Oct. 7.
 President Charles de Gaulle today renewed his promise of self-determination for Algerians and declared: "We again propose peace to those who are still persisting in murder." He made no new proposal to end the six-year struggle.—Reuter.

LEFT: Princess Margaret and Tony Armstrong-Jones attended a televised service at Southwark Cathedral recently, and afterwards were guests of the Bishop for lunch — at the nearby George Inn, a well-known 17th century coaching-house, a pull-up for tourists, and, especially off-season, a haunt of journalists from close-at-hand Fleet Street. In his corset-casock, the Bishop, well-known for his left-wing views as Dr Mervyn Stockwood, said: "I always come here to lunch after ordination services. And quite often at other times. It's very handy."

LEFT: Famous mountaineer and explorer Eric Sipton (right) compares the stringing of one of a batch of snowshoes designed to his order by a London sports goods firm with the stringing on one of their tennis rackets, held by sales director R. E. Haddingham. Sipton ordered the snowshoes for an expedition to Patagonia which he is leading in November, in an attempt to explore the northern edge of the ice-cap, where in a preparatory trip last year he was astounded to come across a live volcano.

ABOVE: One British diplomat who obviously believes in a policy of flexibility is Nigeria's Governor-General Sir James Robertson. Which is why he was ready to bend the knee (in a dignified way, of course) when his over-six-foot frame threatened to block out the man in the back row in this picture of Princess Alexandra meeting the first-ever Federal Council of Ministers of Nigeria.

ABOVE: Sir John Wolfenden (left) and Sir Stanley Rous of the Football Association, studying the report of the Royal Commission on Sport, which was chaired by Sir John. The report calls for £10 million a year to be spent on subsidising sport in Britain, £5 million by the central government through an independent body similar to the Arts Council, and £5 million by local authorities. The Commission began its work before the Olympics, but Britain's comparative failure there must have been important evidence.

RIGHT: Stepping from her car at London Airport recently a tricky moment for the Duchess of Kent as her shoe comes off in a patch of soft tar. But an Air France official is ready with a helping arm; and, gracefully, she slips her foot back into the shoe. She was on her way to Paris to see her niece, Countess Kyburg.

A RADIO PARTY AND A RECITAL BY HARRY ORE

FRIDAY, 10.15 P.M.—This afternoon at the Queen Elizabeth School nearly a thousand young people will gather for the liveliest radio party ever planned in Hongkong.

They'll see the Colony's newest and biggest swing band, 'The Jazzmakers,' led by Radio Hongkong's jazz deejays Alan Hare and Colin Stuart, 'The Fabulous Echoes,' a quintet of guitar playing rock 'n' rollers who're currently pulling in the crowds with their own nightclub act, Larry Allen, clown prince of the keyboard, and Thelma Toledo one of Hongkong's best known band singers.

In addition Marilyn Palmer and Chico Rosa Periera, will sing numbers from their best selling disc 'Offbeat in Hongkong' and prizes will be awarded for the various competitions in which the audience take part. The whole event will be recorded on the spot and broadcast at a quarter past ten Friday evening. A novel feature of this show is that it is designed for both the English and Chinese services, with two compères, Eddy Au-Yeung and Ted Thomas who also produces the show.

THE TOMMY HANDLEY STORY: Tuesday, 9 pm—In Autumn 1939, a new radio show came on the air in Britain and set a fresh and original pattern of listener entertainment. It started the country laughing, and at that time the tonic of laughter was very much needed. The boost to morale provided by Tommy Handley and his show I.T.M.A. (It's That Man Again) spread from the shores of Britain to thousands of servicemen throughout the world.

I.T.M.A. continued to entertain the people immediately after the war too, and when Tommy Handley died in 1949 his loss was felt, not only in Britain, but all over the world where English-speaking people gathered at their radios. The Tommy Handley Story describes the remarkable comedian, and takes listeners behind the scenes of one of the most successful radio series ever produced. Extracts from the many I.T.M.A. shows will bring back many a happy memory to those who followed the fortunes of the happy-go-lucky team led by the irreplaceable Mr Handley.

FESTIVAL PREVIEW: Friday, 7.15 pm—Listeners may have seen building in progress at the West wing of the Star Ferry pier on the Hongkong side, and wondered what it's all about. It is the theatre for the 1960 Festival of the Arts, and is going to be in great demand during the next month.

The Festival will be officially opened on Saturday by Lady Black, and on Friday evening at 7.15 you can hear a radio preview introduced by Victor Price. In the programme there will be interviews with many of the people organising the record number of shows and exhibitions in this year's Festival. Radio Hongkong will also be covering the opening ceremony on Saturday at 12 noon, when the commentators will be Ted Thomas and Pat Penn.

FIESTA LATINA: Saturday, 8.00 pm—Three months ago Radio Hongkong introduced a new series of Latin-American music in which the music itself was interspersed with an authoritative background of the countries in which it is played. Compère Betty Souza, who has made an extensive study of this form of music speaks with the authority born of an unbounding enthusiasm.

This afternoon at 3, Betty will be introducing the first of a new series of 'Fiesta Latina', dealing with music not included in the last programme.

SIR JULIAN HUXLEY—In perspective: Wednesday, 9.15 pm—'In Perspective' is a programme in which famous people look back over their lives and forward to future possibilities, in relation to their life work, their interests and their prognostications for the future of the world.

On Wednesday evening, at a quarter past nine, Sir Julian Huxley, grandson of the famous biologist T. H. Huxley, and himself one of the world's leading biologists describes how the ambitions of his youth have been realised, how his love of nature and interest in all living things has helped shape his career.

SOME TALK OF ALEXANDER: Wednesday, 7.45 pm—Stephen Alexander, whose programme 'Mainly for Middlebrows' enjoyed a regular and enthusiastic following during its long run, is now back in England taking a well earned rest.

The gap of ten thousand miles has done little to stem the flow of words from the effervescent Stephen, and on Wednesday at a quarter to eight in the evening we shall be broadcasting the third in a series of talks recorded by him at the BBC studios and flown out to Hongkong. In this week talk 'Four Steps in the Clouds' Stephen Alexander talks about Bangkok discusses the invasion of a well-known soft drink, and ranges over topics near and far in his usual entertaining manner.

HARRY ORE RECITAL FROM THE CONCERT HALL: Wednesday, 8.30 pm—The Radio Hongkong programme 'From the Concert Hall' which features recitals and performances from both local and international artists has long been a favourite with the music lovers of Hongkong. Few have filled the Wednesday evening spot so regularly and to such good effect as that doyen of Hongkong musicians Harry Ore, who last month celebrated his 74th birthday. In Wednesday evening's recital Mr Ore will play a programme of works ranging from Beethoven to Gasteinuo - Tedesco.

REDIFFUSION

THE STRANGE STORY OF OBIE MORGAN

"The Man Who Was A Horse" is the title of the play featured in CBC playhouse this week.

"The Man Who Was A Horse" is set in a small rural Canadian town. It is the story of the strange malady that afflicted Obie Morgan, and the equally strange cure provided by the family doctor. Obie Morgan, according to one of the characters in the play, "is not exactly crazy and he's not exactly crooked, but he does figure that the human race is against him. He's an accepted nuisance, like a blizzard, or a by-election."

The town realises that something is wrong with old Obie when he starts behaving in a most remarkable way. He keeps dropping into the local grain store for oats, long after his old horse has died. He takes to leaving his bed at night, and next morning the local dairy finds its milk-wagons hauled out of the yard and left on the other side of the town. Then Obie exhibits an uncontrollable desire to whinny in the midst of conversation. Alarmed citizens consult the town doctor. But the doctor has an unexpected diagnosis of the cause of Obie's behaviour; and with the help of Obie's long-suffering wife, he applies a drastic cure.

On Tuesday at 9.35 pm Rediffusion presents "A Mass Of Cobwebs," a play for radio by Brian Batchelor from the short story "The Tractate Middoth" by M. R. James.

It is an unnerving experience for an assistant librarian at one of the big university libraries to go looking for a book and encounter a man "with... a bald head... dry and dusty, and the streaks of hair didn't look like hair. They were like cobwebs. His eyes were sunk right back in his head. And over them, from the eyebrows to the cheekbones were cobwebs. Thick cobwebs..." This intriguing fantasy is conjured round the will of an eccentric old clergyman, which is hidden in a book with the odd title "The Tractate Middoth." M. R. James achieved general literary fame with his Ghost Stories of an Antiquary, a collection of short stories published in 1904.

TELEVISION

EXCITING FEATURE FILM ON FAIR-GROUND LIFE

All the usual Saturday night favourites are back again with Vittorio de Sica as one of "The Four Just Men" "The Slaver" which co-stars glamorous Lisa Gastoni.

Marie Blanchard is the guest star in "Laramie" at 9.50 in a story called "Rope Of Steel." On Sunday you can see that beautiful and exciting actress Diane Cilento when she stars in the feature film "The Woman For Joe." This is a story of fair-ground life and shows the background to the fair-ground folk, the surface thrills, the hidden heartaches and the unsuspected dangers which are all part of their life. George Baker is Miss Cilento's co-star in this film and an excellent cast includes David Kossoff, Violet Farebrother and Sydney Toffler.

Earlier in the evening, one of the Colony's favourite singers is the soloist in "Music In Miniature." This is Winnie Wei, who has a voice of great Oriental charm which covers a wide range of songs from the early classic style to the modern school.

The Monday Documentary deals with the pursuit of beauty and poise in "School for Charm" which shows that a great deal of hard work is involved in being a charming woman.

Bobbie Lee the glamorous and vivacious singing star takes over the resident spot in Tuesday's "The Song Parade" and at 9.45 that excellent actor Michael Rennie is the star of this week's "Suspicion" story in "Woman Turned To Salt."

The vogue for "westerns" in influences music, and in Wednesday's "This Is Your Music" the spotlight is on "Westerns" Songs.

A regular television favourite, MacDonald Carey, is the guest star of Thursday's "Wagon Train" and on Friday in "Screen Director's Playhouse" some stars of the early days of picture making team up in "The Silent Partners." They are Zazu Pitts, Buster Keaton and Joe E. Brown.

COMMERCIAL RADIO 1530 kcs 196 mtrs E.M. FORSTER READS A STORY ABOUT GREECE

E. M. Forster's early novels burst on the world between 1905 and 1910, and in 1924 he published his best known work 'A Passage To India.' It was also his last novel. Since then he has travelled extensively, lectured, become a popular broadcaster, written essays, criticism and the libretto to the opera Billy Bud.

To celebrate his eightieth birthday in 1958 he was persuaded to make some recordings, and one of these can be heard on Tuesday night at 9.30. A lover of Greece—he once remarked 'Greece stands for truth—the story 'The Road from Colonus' is set in that country and concerns an elderly gentleman called Mr Lucas. Musically we celebrate three birthdays this week. On Sunday 'Music For The Sabbath' commemorates the anniversary of Saint-Saens' birth in an hour's concert (10—11 am). Monday's 'Composer of the Day' is Verdi who was born on October 10, 1813 and on Wednesday the birth of Vaughan Williams is celebrated by a concert that includes Sir Adrian Boult conducting the Philharmonic Orchestra in Symphony No. 8 in D minor. More English music can be heard in Composer of the Day on Tuesday, when Peter Pears is the soloist in Benjamin Britten's 'Nocturne', and the Orchestra of the Royal Opera House Covent Garden is conducted by the composer in the Interludes and Pasticciaglla from Peter. Grimes. 'Hassan' by Delius is included in Friday's 'Late Night Symphony' (11.15—midnight).

Mary Collins can be heard in her second talk on Wednesday in 'For The Ladies' (3—4 pm). Her subject is her native land Australia, and the series is entitled 'Walkabout.'

The 1960-61 Racing Season opens at Happy Valley on October 15, and our racing correspondents tips for the first day's events will be given on Friday night at 8.15.

SAM WHITE'S Brussels Newsletter

The wedding guest Belgium wants most of all...

Brussels.
THE important question posed by the forthcoming marriage of King Baudouin—it will be in the second week of November—is not whether General Franco will go (he won't) but whether Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip will.

Nobody here disguises the fact that if they don't, Anglo-Belgian relations, which are already in for severe buffeting owing to events in the Congo, will become somewhat bleak.

It is not a question of finding a suitable substitute, even though he or she may be a member of the Royal Family. For the Belgians it has to be the Queen and if not her then it might just as well be the vicar-general in Ostend.

At the British Embassy in Brussels the Queen's attendance at the wedding is viewed as "extremely unlikely." Technically this is because the Queen, as head of the Church of England, cannot attend a Catholic wedding.

The same objection, of course, cannot apply to her attending the civil ceremony which precedes the religious one. Nor could it apply to attending the reception after the wedding.

Intriguing

That is precisely what the Queen did in the case of a recent Catholic marriage in London—that of the Queen Mother's great-niece, Miss Suzanne Willis.

It should be remembered that Baudouin is not only a ruling monarch but a much closer family relative of the Royal Family than Miss Willis.

The fact is that no member of the Royal Family attended the wedding of Baudouin's brother, Prince Albert, last year, and the Belgians would be greatly stirred if amendments were made by the Queen attending this one.

There are other intriguing questions posed by the wedding. For example, why should the Palace be so coy on the subject of where Baudouin and Fabiola first met?

I do not want to join the current guessing game on the subject, but I have excellent reasons for believing that they first met in Lausanne, where they were introduced to each other by the 73-year-old Queen Ena of Spain.

Their further meetings took place chiefly in Luxembourg, where Baudouin's sister, Princess Josephine Charlotte of Luxembourg, acted as chaperon.

As for Fabiola's rumoured royal descent there is no foundation for it. Her late father was a count only for the last 25 years of his life and this was a Papal title.

He acquired his other title of marquis only five years ago when Franco authorised his adoption of this title which had been extinct for nearly a century and which was last held by his great grandmother's family.

Shameful

Easily the most interesting person in this heavily provincial and stultified capital is the Queen Mother, Queen Elisabeth.

This 84-year-old woman with her spirited Left-wing views and her profound musical scholarship has just performed an act of really quite magnificent humanity.

A Russian-born friend of mine lost all trace of his sister in Russia, who disappeared into a prison camp.

Elisabeth heard of this case recently and immediately applied all her colossal energies to rescuing the woman.

She worked on the Soviet Embassy in Brussels and the Belgian Embassy in Moscow and reinforced these efforts with direct appeals to Khrushchev.

Thanks to her efforts the woman has been freed and allowed to settle with her brother in Brussels.

Greed

Probably no civilised government in modern times has been guilty of a more shameful act than the Belgian Government's abrupt decision to grant immediate independence to the Congo.

Every report they received from their men on the spot told them that bloody chaos would intervene if independence were granted before at least 1964, yet they went ahead and scuttled.

Why? The answer, I'm afraid, is as shameful as the deed.

The truth is that the Congo was acquired in greed and abandoned through greed.

Immediately the Belgians realised that for the transition period until independence could be safely granted they would be pouring more money into the Congo than they would be getting out of it their minds were settled on abandon.

I am told that "The conscience of the Belgian Socialist Party" would not have permitted a delay in granting independence.

A major constitutional and Royal crisis very nearly supervened on the Congo crisis.

The King listened to foolish advice to get rid of the present Eyskens Government and form instead a National Government led by such elder statesmen as the Right Wing Catholic van Zeland and the Socialist and present Secretary-General of NATO Paul Henri Spaak.

The interesting thing is that Spaak was prepared to go along with the scheme and to resign his NATO post.

The scheme was foiled by Eyskens's refusal to resign and his blunt challenge to the King to dismiss him. At this point the conspirators took fright.

QUOTE

Publisher René Julliard: "There is no better posture for important business negotiations than a hangover. You can then impress your rivals by saying No to everything as the easiest way out until you feel better."

(London Express Service).

SHOULD A FIRM DICTATE YOUR LIFE?

by Kitty Dixon

THERE used to be room at the top for a man with a college degree and an authoritative charm. Then it became necessary for a potential top-level executive to acquire a socially presentable wife.

But now big business is reaching so far into a man's private life that it is demanding that he be civic-minded too.

"If you want to be a junior executive, be a joiner," is the advice the bright young men hear from the voice in the lush executive suite.

Join every club, church committee, and welfare organisation you can. It's good for business.

Like most trends, this one began in the United States. Now it is infiltrating Britain's more cautious business circles.

When I spoke to William B. Murphy, 53-year-old chief executive of America's Campbell Soup Company about it, he obligingly listed his own "outside" activities, which include running a Presbyterian Church Fund Drive and heading the campaign to raise money for Radio Free Europe.

"Taking part in community affairs is accepted good business practice in the States," he said. "It's good public relations for the company... and it's broadening for the man."

"A company like mine takes an interest in a man's extra activities. If report to my board of directors about mine. They approve them, and encourage me to do as much community work as possible."

Although they'd soon have something to say if I took on too much.

Added Mr. Murphy, with a generous smile: "I contribute 10 per cent of my income to charity." (Mr. Murphy earns more than £200,000 a year.)

Eric Moonman, adviser in what is called "human relations" for the British Institute of Management, tells me that this business man's concern for his community's welfare is catching on quickly in Britain.

"It's a matter of degree, of course," he said. "In America, a firm's board of directors will often sit to decide which of their members will sit on which civic committees."

"In Britain it is usually left to the man himself to decide which organisations to join."

"But it is more subtle, clear to him that his firm wishes him to take part in as many outside activities as possible."

This is a phenomenon of business which has been in the middle-sized city, where the public-spirited chairman of the local council becomes something of a public figure.

In Britain, it exists not so much in London as in the cities of the north, where most large industrial concerns have their factories and headquarters.

Likewise, in America you find it not in New York but in the industrial centres of the West and Mid-West.

Chemicals

A spokesman for one of Britain's largest business concerns, I.C.I., told me: "Many of our directors play important parts in their local affairs in factories and headquarters."

"We try to encourage it." (And indeed, they do. I.C.I. allows civic-minded employees time off during the working day to attend committee meetings.)

"Taking an interest in civic affairs is something we owe to any community which flourishes around one of our factories," he said.

A noble reason for a practice which undoubtedly benefits the community.

Silence...

Yet one British Rotary Club was actually embarrassed by an address on this subject given by Mr. Moonman, the human relations adviser.

"The members were extremely civic-minded business men," he said. "But they didn't want to talk about the benefits of their community work."

There was an awkward silence when I finished talking.

In this, I wonder, an indication of some subtle, dividing line between the benefit to the community and the benefit to the business man himself? (London Express Service).

Why Herbert Morrison never became Prime Minister

By FRANK
OWEN

WITH a little better luck, Herbert Morrison might well have ended up Prime Minister of Britain. (Or, as he infers himself with a little more trickery on his part—and perhaps a little less treachery on the part of some of his colleagues.)

For on at least two occasions, Herbert Morrison just missed taking over the leadership of the Labour Party.

The first was in November 1935, after George Lansbury had retired.

Three names were submitted to the Parliamentary Party meeting. Clement Attlee, Arthur Greenwood and Herbert Morrison.

In the voting Attlee got 58, Morrison 44 and Greenwood 23. It had been agreed that the candidate with the lowest vote should drop out and a second ballot be taken.

But now Morrison has no cordial feeling for the man who had been his comrade since they were Mayors of Hackney and Stepney together 40 years ago.

Indecently, "Old Herbie" or "Old Bob," as his pals from Westminster to the East End called him, is unlike the cheery, friendly, bustling character so well-known and well-regarded in the House of Commons and in the London County Council, which he has served with such devotion over the years.

He is critical of most of his contemporaries in politics—and nearly all his colleagues. Besides But Galskell refused. The Attlee (who after the front-blot result, bitterly surprising stage Ramsay MacDonald's betrayal of the Labour Party to Morrison, gave Galskell 197 votes. Bevan 70 and himself a mere 40. At once, he dropped the Deputy-Leadership.

Did Attlee deliberately defer his own departure (he was five years older than Morrison) until the end of the war?

Yes! Yes! Morrison, he did!

Then there is Lord Beaverbrook ("The Beaver"), who was "an extraordinary Minister in every sense of the word."

He pays "the Beaver" tribute for "outstanding contribution to victory in the Battle of Britain."

But Morrison tells his own extraordinary stories of competition for materials and tools between Beaverbrook's Ministry of Aircraft Production and his own Ministry of Supply.

One of these concerns machine tools which were brought off by ship from France just before the 1940 capitulation. Morrison says that he sent the Earl of Suffolk to collect them, and that he did so. But when he landed them in England, Lord Beaverbrook had an agent waiting there to grab them for him.

However, the agent held on to them for Morrison. The story is quite untrue, for the gear in question was in fact put aboard the ship in France by an emissary of the Ministry of Aircraft Production.

No, Morrison's friendliest feelings are to people on the other side of the fence.

There is Winston Churchill and his scientific adviser, Professor Lindemann (who was "an ascetic, bachelor, vegetarian, teetotaler and non-smoker").

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 19): The week-end may not turn out as restful as you had hoped, but a new contact will make the change of plans worth while.

PISCES (February 20-March 20): Try to show sympathy for a friend's complaint, even though you feel he is to blame for his troubles.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't let a member of your family discourage you from going ahead with the task you have set yourself.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A business associate may withdraw his support temporarily, and you will have to get along on your own for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21): This may be your lucky day for swinging a financial deal which you have hesitated to consider up to now.

CANCER (June 22-July 21): Unless you are absolutely sure of all the details involved, don't enter into a binding commitment today.

LEO (July 22-August 21): You will contribute greatly to the success of a social gathering and your partner will be proud of you.

VIRGO (August 22-September 22): Delay the purchase of a luxury if there is any chance of an urgent call on your ready funds.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22): Confidence in your ability to do a certain job is half the battle. You will manage all right if you are sure of yourself.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): A serious discussion with your partner is essential before you decide to go ahead with a rather unusual plan.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21): You may find it impossible to keep a hastily made promise. If you are frank about it the other party should understand.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20): You will realise that friends remain friends even though you may have neglected them lately through no fault of your own.

LUCKY ENCOUNTER: If today is your birthday, a meeting with a man named ALBERT may have some special significance.

MILLINERS are wild about wool. Never before has wool gone to everyone's head in such a literal way. They are knitting it in Norway and Denmark, crocheting it in Italy, and sewing it for the salons of Paris.

High and blown-up crowns are, of course, topical news. Some are quite squarish, others are completely round. The Millinery Institute of Great Britain announces an almost complete lack of trimmings, since the materials and their interesting shapes speak for themselves.

Turbans in jersey are elegant and exotic. Some are quite simple, just head wrapping and ear covering. Others have long drapes and call for courage and a Mata Hari quality on the side of the wearer!

We have had a long hot summer, and it seems that designers are expecting a long cold winter. At the Christian Dior, London, collection, wool and tweed hats partnered suits and coats.

But this winter the smart woman will definitely let wool go to her head.

Don't be surprised if you find the sophisticated and the definitely non-domesticated counting stitches this season for the "hand-knitted" are definitely all the rage.

JUST A LITTLE SKID—BUT HOW IT OUTRAGED THE EXAMINER

The day I failed
the driving test

HOW many times last week did you marvel that the person operating the car ahead could ever have obtained a driver's licence?

How many weekends have you crawled along behind a single crooked line of cars straddling a highway designed to take four lanes of traffic?

I got tired of speculating as to how the right to enrage people—not to mention injure them—is awarded in Britain. I decided to take a driving test.

I also decided not to volunteer the information that I already possess a foreign licence and have been motoring around three continents for the past 15 years—with contented male passengers at that.

Offhand

After waiting a mere three months in between my application for a test and the great day itself, I beelied down to a county town. There a round-faced examiner and I took a tour through the quiet streets.

At the end of our little tour, he closed a black book in which he had been busy making cryptic marks, looked off into the distance, and said in an offhand kind of way—

"I'm afraid, Miss Barnes, that your driving is below the standard we require. But I shall do all, Miss Barnes, that I can to help you."

Whereupon he handed me a piece of paper entitled Statement of Failure to Pass Test of Competence to Drive.

I thought that the judgment of this round-faced man was mildly surprising.

Partly because past driving conditions in Mexico and the Alps and New York City have been considerably more complex than those posed by the streets in which I took the test, which didn't have narrow mountain passes, nor three feet of snow and ice, nor eight lanes of traffic.

Awkward

And partly, I was surprised to learn of my incompetence because in 15 years of pretty constant driving, I have never injured—or caused to be injured—an animal, two-legged or otherwise. A lot of bugs have been squashed on my windscreen. I admit. But that is all. Still, I dare say the examiner knows what's best.

Let me report, as accurately as I can, the test itself, and see what you think.

We got off, it is true, to an awkward start. The round-faced examiner—to whom I was very polite—asked me where my L-plates were.

"I want you to pretend that a child has just dashed out in front of your car..."

by SUSAN

As I didn't want to tell him that I was already equipped with a foreign licence valid in Britain, I had to resort to something I disapproved of: lies. And when I lie, I become hopelessly muddled, always trying to make the thing better by elaboration that grows madder and madder as I go on.

"Ordinarily, use another car in the country... a friend... broke down... arriving later today..."

Utterly meaningless mouthings. So it is possible, of course, that at the outset the examiner thought he was dealing with a raving lunatic. Anyhow, after retreating into his big building, he re-emerged with some L-plates of his own, and together we tied them to my car.

As we set off, he said in a lone so gentle it was sinister: "Now, Miss Barnes, I want you just to pretend I am not here."

Which is rather like a dentist saying the same thing just before he takes a grip on your wide-open jaw and thrusts an enormous steel drill into your head and begins pounding up your favourite choppers.

But what followed turned out to be simple enough. I drove along a road until the examiner told me to turn left, or turn right, or stop or whatever. I turned around in an empty street without touching either kerb. I backed around a corner into another totally empty street.

I was not asked to park between two cars, the part of the test that novices in other countries dread.

Is one of Britain's problems of urban traffic congestion, I wondered, simply that the examiner is incurious about whether you can park efficiently in a tricky space?

Wonder

I stopped wondering, however, because we were in another deserted street, and the examiner had proposed an interesting test of reactions.

"When I hit the dashboard with this newspaper," he said, "I want you to pretend that a child has just dashed out in front of your car."

I glanced in my rear mirror and checked that the street was still empty.

"Look," I said to the examiner. "It's pouring with rain. Do you really want me to pretend that a child runs in front of the car?"

"Yes," he said. "I do."

So I did.

When he smashed his rolled paper down on the dashboard—CRACK—I stuck out my left arm in front of him and jammed on the brakes.

The car stopped moving forward all right. But it also went into a spin on the wet road. We found ourselves rattling along with the car poised in against the left kerb!

"Well, anyhow," I said chirpily, "the child's still alive." The examiner said nothing. But I noticed that the expression in the eye he fixed upon me changed from baldness to something approaching resentment. I also noticed that his complexion had, for some reason, become the colour of putty.

Silence

There was a minute of silence while I watched the examiner struggling with his sense of outrage.

At last, in steely tones, he said: "Let us, Miss Barnes, continue."

Eventually we found ourselves back where we had started. Having handed me the Statement of Failure to Pass Test of Competence to Drive, the examiner bade me goodbye, got out of my car, retrieved his L-plates, and with quickening pace, disappeared back inside his big building.

I began reading about my incompetence. The statement consisted of a long list of observations, and the examiner put an X beside the one which applied to the particular applicant.

My examiner had put an X beside No. 7. I had failed. I read, so "stop the vehicle in emergency under control."

At least, I thought, my examiner is perfectly clear in his requirements. In Britain, if it is raining, you run over children rather than disobey the rules of smooth braking taught in driving schools.

Man-sized Meccano-style strip makes a wall interesting, useful—and adaptable

BY RAYMOND HAWKEY

DESIGN DIRECTOR.

MOST of us never consider using more than the floor to carry our furnishings. But when you think of it, there are usually six surfaces to a room—four walls, floor, and ceiling. The most we are likely to do with our walls is to hang pictures on them.

In fact, there are now a number of excellent shelving systems available which make your walls work for you; make it possible to convert a wall into a useful and decorative storage surface.

These systems which can be an enormous asset, particularly in a small room, are basically of two types.

The first consists of ladder-like uprights made either of wood or metal with shelves and cabinets suspended between them. These can be either free-standing or fixed to wall or to the floor and ceiling.

The second system consists of a series of slotted uprights screwed to the wall on which shelf brackets and cabinets are hung.

The best of both systems are elegant, strong, can be taken with you if you move. They can carry books, ornaments, storage cabinets, lamps, radio, TV, and a work surface.

Shelving units should always be fixed to or stood against a sound plain wall; a patterned wallpaper will almost certainly result in an extremely unpleasant dazzle.

The needed and the new

What the harassed scientists there need is a good, efficient electronic brain to catch up on the backlog of 3,700 specifications awaiting examination.

thought of that, although they've thought of nearly everything else. Some of the ideas are as whacky as the electric plug into which you pop the scent of your choice (they include, oddly enough, tobacco and a "jolly" tablet for parties) and which fills the room with the required smell.

Wycombe which radio-controls trucks, picks out the furniture for delivery, runs it out to the van, and loads it.

Then there's a clever machine which has finger-tip control of over 2,000 sewing techniques—flick a dial and you can embroider like Hartnell.

Paper comes back into its own with the superbly sensible idea of replacing metal dustbins with large brown paper bags fitted into a metal frame. It saves the dustman 2½ tons of carrying a day.

Another treat for the house is a fully automatic tumble dryer, to match the automatic washing machine, and a hot air firelighter. This astonishing electrical gadget has only to be turned on and directed at the fire (or a cigarette) and there's your light.

AUTOMATIC

Improvements on old ideas are coming up all the time. There's a solution for home photographers that combines developing and fixing—and now a completely automatic camera. And an electric shoe-polisher that spreads the polish, buffs the shoes, then gives them an extra shine.

But don't let's give the backroom boys the idea that they don't suppose anyone has can slack off. There are a lot more improvements to life at home that I want to see.

THIS IS WHAT I WANT...

I would welcome a washing machine that really does think for itself; whips round the flat on Monday, collects the sheets, washes them, dries them, airs them and washes itself afterwards.

The gadget that enables you to turn off your television set from your chair is useful enough, but I really need a gadget to turn off a neighbour's vacuum cleaner when it interferes with "No Hiding Place."

And I'm sure there would be a huge sale for electric light bulbs which could be adjusted, when one had guests, to dim slowly after 10 o'clock.

You have 18 points yourself so the total for the partnership will be somewhere between 35 and 38 high card points and the opponents will hold from 5 to 7 high card points against you. There is no way for the enemy to hold two aces, but if your partner holds the 16-point minimum, they might hold an ace and a king and if that ace and king are in the same suit you can lose your slam before you obtain the lead.

Nevertheless North should raise his partner right to six no-trump. There is no way to find out about which ace and king are missing, but if an ace and king actually are missing, odds are 7 to 2 against their being in the same suit and even if they are that suit may not be opened.

Incidentally, the slam wheels in in spite of the heart finesse being wrong. South simply knocks out the ace of clubs and runs off twelve tricks without bothering with the heart finesse.

1♥ Pass 1♠ Pass

You, South, hold:
♠ A2 ♥ AQJ105 ♦ K8764 ♣ 40
What do you do?

A—Bid two diamonds only. You have a big hand if your partner can fit either of your suits but maybe he is loaded with black cards. In that case caution is indicated.

He is old now. It is enough to sit in his old basketwork chair by the Swiss lake's edge, watching the coot in the reeds and the mountains that climb up into the clouds.

CARL GUSTAV JUNG

SIXTY years of restless exploration into the mystery of the human mind have scored his ruddy face and thinned his snowy hair. He walks heavily and slowly with a stick. Everyone wants to crowd in on his solitude, and the weight of the world's esteem is heavy.

But he is happy. The old can live well, he has discovered, if they live as though they had centuries. If you think along the lines of nature you think properly.

So, when he feels like it, the father of psychoanalysis chops a little wood, or cooks, or tends his garden in leather apron and open shirt.

Or he adds another chisel stroke or two to the stone bear he is carving, at the strange lonely tower he built for himself by the Zurich lake.

They were dark days when he built that tower. He was alone in his beliefs, and even his friends thought he was going mad.

Beliefs

Now, if he let them, the world's great psychiatrists, philosophers, scholars, politicians, scientists and artists would beat a path to Bollingen to find him.

Some reach him. And when the old face cracks into its wide impudent grin, and the twinkle steals into the shrewd peasant eyes, they begin to discern the impressive measure of the greatness of Dr. Carl Gustav Jung.

For Jung's laughter is the key. Like the wise old voice with its Tautorian overtones, it is living testimony to the worth of the philosophy that has served him so well.

His laughter is cosmic laughter. It allies him with the perplexed, truth-seeking common men who have read his books, against the lofty intellectuals who flatter him but have not.

It is the happy laughter, clear-minded and unafraid of Jung knows himself.

Others, by following him, can know themselves and learn to be themselves. Before this inner knowledge, terror of the unknown melts.

This is the simple, tremendous truth he has given the world.

He is the Dream Diviner; the last survivor of the great unconscious depths of human nature and the bedrock of modern psychology.

The definition of "extraverts," "introverts" and the "inferiority complex" was only the beginning. Throughout the world, his work has imparted a new bias towards the spiritual and the idealistic.

Sigmund Freud

His influence has coloured the whole stream of contemporary thought, and revealed rich new veins of inspiration to writers, artists, poets and choreographers.

God (instinct, conscience, intuition, call him what you will) is everywhere. Dr. Jung knows it. It was when Sigmund Freud and Adler said he was not, but surely a father-yearning, that their ways parted so significantly for the world.

For the six fruitful years of his friendship and collaboration with Freud, Jung tried. But how could he accept sex as the driving-force of all human behaviour? Man, his instincts told him, was motivated by so much else besides. Man strove also after head, power, religion, art.

So Jung rejected indignantly the creed that was too narrow to admit philosophy, but viewed the brain (as he put it) as an appendage of the genital glands.

Latin

Analytical psychology had arrived.

Time has been kinder to the renegade disciple than he could well have expected. He was darkly alone when he renounced his master's techniques.

But Jung's spiritualised psychology has won a public esteem that Freud's rigid concept never did. In the eyes of more and more authoritative laymen and professionals, the new science has become wisdom's powerful ally. The emphasis has swung in a fashion that the old man could never have guessed.

"Called or uncalled, God will be present" reads the Latin inscription carved into the stone-work over Dr. Jung's other, lushest home by the lakeside.

And there was never really any doubt that the troubled pioneer would find God waiting in his dark tower. For he stemmed from a long line of pastors of the Swiss Reformed Church. Carl Gustav was born at Kesswil, on the Swiss side of Lake Constance, to Paul Jung, an evangelical minister.

Jung's boyhood as a paragon's son among Swiss peasants revealed to him much of human reality and man's inner disquiet. As a student at Basle University it was to archaeology and zoology that he turned first.

But soon the Medical Faculty drew him; and, graduating in 1900, he began his career as a psychologist the same year.

When he met Freud seven years later he was already a senior physician in nervous and mental diseases and a university lecturer in psychiatry.

Obsessional

And he was married to the pretty girl, heiress to a Swiss watch fortune, of whom he had said when he first saw her on a staircase: "That girl is my wife."

Jung valued his friendship with Freud. But "he started to generalise too soon," he recalls without rancour now. "He was a bit of the obsessional type. He thought it, so it must be true."

When Jung published "The Psychology of the Unconscious" in 1912, the split widened to a chasm. Jung broke with Freud, his practice and his lecturing, and retreated into research.

If Freud was inclined towards dogma, no prophet was ever less so than Carl Jung. He spent months and years in the field studying primitive peoples in Africa, India, New Mexico and Arizona.

He explored the byways of Zen Buddhism, ancient cave drawings, astrology, Yoga, alchemy, fairy tales. Nothing that had ever captured men's hearts or engaged men's minds was unworthy of his sage and discerning scrutiny.

Insane

How men's minds work. What can matter more? he asks his occasional visitors at the lakeside now. Yet who considers the minds of Khrushchev or Eisenhower? What was he happy to see a global ruler went mad? Do not dictators owe their domination to the slow mental poison induced by the crumbling of the old standards of morality?

In his recent book "Flying Saucers," Dr. Jung advanced a startlingly unsuspected explanation for these most modern of phenomena. What if saucers were a projection of man's inner disquiet? A search for portents in the sky?

Looking out from his stone tower, the old man sees a growing danger that disturbs him almost more than the H-bomb threat. It is "the completely false idea of the statistically average man."

Measured every possible in a gravel pit, he suggests, and compute the average. Then try to find one exactly that size.

But Jung is no desiccated pedant of a truth-seeker. Wisdom has always sat lightly on the scholarly shoulders that sweep a little now, life, and his detective novels and recent treatise on children, (19) grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren, matter too.

That is his whole point, after all. The world has laden him heavily with distinctions, honorary degrees and medals. Jungian analysts, trained at his Institute in Zurich, practise everywhere.

But it all remains great fun. And Carl Jung will be smiling, as he gazes across the water to the mountains on his 85th birthday.

There is always more laughter ahead. When you know yourself, you can be sure of that.

... And now the cult's signature tune hits the top
By DENIS PITTS

SUDDENLY—in a normally quiet English meadow—a screaming stock-car cuts a swath of death and horror through a crowd of people. A child lies hideously maimed. A young man is carried away, his back broken.

At almost the same time a young singer named Ricky Valance was overjoyed to hear that, for the first time, his record "Tell Laura I Love Her" was at the top of the record hit-parade.

"Tell Laura" is the mauling stock-car driver of a dying stock car driver.

Its success coincides exactly with what appears to be a tearing, rushing, near-morbid desire for speed and danger on the part of British adults and their teenage young.

Teenagers

More than 8,000 people drove and cycled through the quiet Kentish countryside last weekend to see the thrills at Lydden, near Dover, when a car driven by 30-year-old Fred Funnell crashed into a crowd of bystanders, killing a man and injuring ten others.

There some 60 disused cars were driven recklessly to their death by a determined collection of men who included builders, printers, house-painters, garage-pump attendants, and waiters.

"It is the car's last fling before it is taken off to be broken up," said the organiser, Mr. William Chesson. "Our boys drive them as fast as they can—and they enjoy doing it."

"Fred Funnell, who was driving the car, is a highly experienced driver—quite unlike the others. His car was the most reliable on the track. He was just unlucky."

There were five teenagers among the drivers—and hundreds more in the crowd, boys in black leather, girls in hell skirts and drainpipe tight — screaming for speed.

Screaming "GO—GO—GO!" as cars screeched together, collided and overturned.

'Chicken'

But this astonishing lust for danger only begins there.

In country lanes, on disused airfields, in unpatrolled London side streets they play a game called "Chicken."

In this two young motor-cyclists drive head-on at each other at full speed. The one who gives way and swerves first is the chump.

A suburban police officer told me: "We know this is going on all the time. If anyone gets hurt, the whole gang disappears—and we put the accident down to a hit and run driver."

There are variations—such as driving into a coffee bar doorway at 60 miles an hour.

This happened in Stoney, Four youngsters were hurt.

The Cad

And when they tire of driving at each other, driving through doorways, driving up a wooden ramp over an oil-barrel (blindfolded, to make it interesting), they set out as gangs for what they call a "village burn-up."

This happened in the gentle town of Horsham recently.

Two-score Teddy Boys roared into the town on motor scooters and beat up every young person in sight. Chains, knives, and pick-hafts were used.

From motor scooters they graduate quickly to second, third, fourth, fifth—hand American cars. The craze for these is spreading like a petrol fire on an electric-heater.

I quote from the 19-year-old owner of a 1935 Cadillac. "My mate and me owned a Vespa which we sold for 90 quid. We split the money, like, I bought this Cad and he bought a Dodge. Fifty pence each."

The cars are old, heavy, and burn a gallon of petrol for each 10 miles on the road. "Call it six when we've got a move on," said this youngster.

Sobs...

How long before they are playing "Chicken" in these?

Already three young lads have been lost in furious races from Brighton pier to Vauxhall Bridge.

Sequel to "Tell Laura" is being published in England in mid-October. It is Laura's answer — "Tell Tommy I Miss Him."

A spokesman for Lawrence Wright, the publishers, said: "It's sentimental, certainly. And it will soon be at the top of the Hit Parade."

"We have had to change a line in it which goes 'Poor Tommy is in Heaven' because the B.C.C. said they wouldn't use it that way."

The kids who died did not end their lives singing "Tell Laura."

They died in terms of gurgled sob to the accompaniment of crying, bewildered girls on a lonely road in the English rain.

LOGAN GOURLAY

I get the first whisper of his coming

B.B.C. wants the cynical Mr Mort Sahl

I promise a singular sense of wit...

IN America, his own country—though he's by no means proud of it—some people say he has more influence now than Eisenhower, Nixon, or Kennedy.

His name is Mort Sahl, which is pronounced Saul, and that's about his only tenuous association with the Bible.

Strictly speaking, he's a comic or a night club entertainer, but he's much more than that. He's managed to build himself a reputation as something of an oracle, a political pundit.

He's talked about, quoted, vilified, lauded from night club bars to the White House. He's an intimate friend of Adlai Stevenson. He's consulted by Nixon and Kennedy. As yet he hasn't been called into UNO by Mr K or Castro. Over five pages is his spread and discussed by that American master magazine of inversion. Now I hear that arrangements are being made to bring him to Britain for the first time. When he comes in the next few months he will probably appear in cabaret in London, but negotiations are now in hand for him to appear on television—BBC television.

Barbs...

I am surprised that Auntie BBC will be the first to introduce the salty, irreverent, iconoclastic Sahl to Britain. But I congratulate her.

Apart from a few enthusiasts who have collected his records like "Look Forward in Anger," he is still unknown here.

He has been labelled the sickest of America's new sick comedians, but mainly by the Philistines who cannot swallow any humour that isn't sickeningly banal or lewd.

Certainly he has pioneered a new type of verbal comedy. (He'd rather praise Eisenhower than do a song.) Perhaps it's a variation of a type and style that's been out-moded since Will Rogers.

He doesn't tell gags, jokes with carefully timed punch lines. He's a raconteur rather than a gagster. But his stories can be jumbled, mixed-up—a neurotic pattern of the times and the country he lives in.

His language can be caustic, loaded with psychiatric jargon, beat talk, campus idiom.

In essence, he's a first-class performing satirist with a carefully honed scalpel for the follies and foibles of contemporary America, particularly political America.

I first met him and watched him perform about six years ago in San Francisco when he was rising to prominence. I have met and watched him many times since. He has never failed to be urgently, savagely topical.

These folk singers wear velvet shirts even to the navel. But they have no novels. This is the ultimate rejection of mother.

Maybe the Russians will steal our secrets and then they'll be two years behind the times. "You can say this for our scientists, they're keeping America's feet on the ground—and off the moon."

"Have you heard about the McCarthy jacket. It's like the Eisenhower jacket except it has an extra flap to go over the mouth."

"Is there anyone I haven't offended yet...?"

He never pauses for laughs. The caustic commentary jerks on like a gramophone record turning a little too fast.

Off stage Sahl, at 33, is moody, introspective, and he appears to be taking himself somewhat seriously. I've heard him say: "I'm the intellectual voice of the era."

But I suspect his sharp tongue was in check. However, he is serious about his work. "I'm not a sick comic. I don't make jokes about rape and amputees."

His critics call him a nihilist, but Sahl says: "If I criticize somebody, it's only because I have higher hopes for the world. Something good to replace the bad."

I hope he'll forgive me if I say I hope he mortifies them. While awaiting the arrival of Mr Sahl two American comedians, Allen and Rossi, whom Princess Alexandra saw at the Pigalle, are also specialising in sharp, topical, political rags. For example:—

 "We will now sing the No. 1 song by the coloured boy wonder Lumumba — 'Bongo Bongo Bongo, I don't wanna leave the Congo.'"
 They add: "That guy Lumumba is as unpredictable as Cousins. Mr Galskell gives us a liver every time we say that."

What they say about their own politicians is unprintable—and probably accurate.

I'M STILL wondering what it means. It was on the back of a huge cement lorry and it said in ominous red letters:—
 "Danger. Beware of unpropped body."

Puzzle of the pinta

I am more than a little puzzled by this week's news story about the dance instructor who went on strike because their boss insisted that they drank a pint of milk a day to keep their strength up.

They refused on the ground that it would be fattening.

I happen to know a doctor who went to the school for tuition. Three of the girl instructors complained they were losing weight because of the work. They asked him for a fattening diet.

I KNOW an intelligent dog, usually a well-behaved dog (an unshaggy Alsatian), which was walking past Olympia the other day with its owner. Without warning it growled and attacked two men who had stopped to read one of the posters near the main door. It was a poster advertising The Cat Show.

(London Express Service).

Just Fancy That!

ROAD Safety Officer Stanley Shipton, a Leicester-shire police sergeant, took his car along the other day for the 10-year test. Today he is a pedestrian. His 21-year-old 8 h.p. saloon was failed—because of its brakes.

A COUPLE who could not find an attendant to take their 6d. admission fee when they visited the tower of St Botolph's Church, Boston, Lincolnshire, have just posted it instead—48 years later.

—And this in the bowler is Tradman Acker Bilk

By PETER EVANS

BEARDED Bernard Bilk stands well over 5ft. 6in. high and looks as if he has spent his 31 years being thumped on the head in a long line of Three Stooges films.

He also looks as if he has enjoyed it in a quaint sort of way.

Yet this man, this clarinet player from the Somerset village of Penford (population 870), is the man the British public has chosen as their leader.

It is indeed a curious choice. "I don't know why they picked on me," said Mr Bilk. (He likes to be known as Acker.) "I'm not a beatnik type at all. I wash, Daddy."

"I'm more, or... What? More rustic. A simple country lad with a taste for cider and jazz. Except you can't get decent cider nowadays."

FATHER-IMAGE

I said: "Now you've been acclaimed as a celebrity and taken up by the Beatles as a sort of bowler-hatted father-image, do you miss anything about your old way of life?"

He said: "I miss the seasons mostly."

"I mean, take London. You never really see the weather. The seasons slip by. Nobody notices. It's sad. You miss chestnut times and the harvest and the rain and the sun."

Mr Bilk suddenly laughed. Then: "The funny thing is I started all this in prison. Yes, I did. Well, I was dead unlucky."

I was in the Kate-Kate Carney Army, too—when I was found asleep on guard in Egypt. Three months I got.

"So I was a bit fed up like so I asked for a clarinet—I had to indent for it on Form 108— and practised for about five hours every day. So by the time they let me out I was mad about jazz."

Mr Bilk's three months inside paid dividends.

£70 A WEEK

Today, Mr Bilk lives with his wife and two children in a flat in Highgate.

"I'm lonely there, Daddy. We don't know the neighbours and I'm sure they don't want to know us. There's not the closeness of village life here. At Penford everybody knows everybody else."

Then he discussed the high finances of Acker Bilk.

"Mind you," says Acker modestly, "I don't make that much. The band makes about £1,000 a week and my own take is only about £70 a week. Not much. But I don't mind."

I'm pretty big in Penford. Even the bell-ringers swing. "They're real gone, Daddy. I'm a celebrity here, man."

"And if all this ends tomorrow I won't mind too much. I've had my kicks. I'll go on playing for fun."

"My wife and kids and I did. Well, I was dead unlucky. I was in the Kate-Kate Carney Army, too—when I was found asleep on guard in Egypt. Three months I got."

Rebirth of AIRCRAFT ENTHUSIASTS' CLUB

The powerful engine revved up to a thunderous roar; the twin exhaust pipes back-fired violently; and the heavy Centurion tank leapt forward with a jerk and then came to a sudden halt, nearly throwing the young corporal out of his turret.

Two sergeants standing nearby were going to curse their heads off, but the blushing blonde who emerged from the driver's hatch made them change their mind, and their language!

A third 'Centurion', trying to get into a sixteen feet wide ditch, rumbled on blindly, missing the overgrown trench miserably.

To avoid being pierced by a careless lance, I have to explain at this point that the 'Centurions' on that December day were not driven by the regulars of the 17/21 Lancers.

The blonde and the other 'idiots' were members of the AIRCRAFT ENTHUSIASTS' CLUB who were on their annual visit to the 1st Royal Tank Regiment.

THE above episode is but one of the many adventures of the wonderful Aircraft Enthusiasts' Club which, is about to hit Hongkong again!

Thanks to the good work of some energetic young people who have been working feverishly to get the Club re-organised, the A.E.C. is at last springing to life again, so if you are interested in joining the club, you may send in your applications now.

THE club is suitable for everyone who is interested in anything at all other than actors and actresses

IN order to fulfil the objects of the club, the Committee shall make arrangements for its members to visit the Air Force Stations, Commercial Airlines, Airport establishments, aircraft-carriers, armoured regiments, etc.

Although the main object is to promote interest in aircraft (and in tanks and ships), members will not find it lacking in social activities.

Socials

Social activities will be in the form of picnics and parties. An annual dinner-dance party is held on the last day of each year — and lasting till the early hours of the first day in the following year — at which the Club Band provides the dance music.....

While on the subject of the Club Band, budding musicians may be interested to know that they stand a good chance of being accepted and that they may enjoy special privileges if selected to play in the Club Band. "Blow-suck-suckers" are not considered as musicians — what an insult — unless they play exceptionally well.

Committee

If you ever get appointed a Committee Member — which is quite possible, as there is still a post vacant — you will have a chance to look through the files and see with pride the Vice-Marshal P. D. Holder, D.S.O., D.F.C., who gave the Club the motto "Caelum Capesset" ("Reach for the Sky"); Group Captain H. A. S. Disney, O.B.E. who was the club's first President; and Wing Commander R. C. Rotheram, O.B.E., D.F.C., who is at present the Club's Honorary President.

A.E.C. members were treated to a special air display staged by Vampire and Venom Aircraft of 28 Squadron, R.A.F., Kai Tak.

Now, we would like, for the benefit of cautious young readers, to publish the complete Club Constitution here, but I fear that there would then be little space for anything else on the Teen Pages. So here instead, we give you the essential facts:

Qualification

To qualify for membership, you must be between 15 and 23 years of age, and of 'desirable' character (search me what character is considered desirable).

Each member must pay an entrance fee of HK$5.00 and thereafter a monthly subscription of HK$3.00 to be paid on or before the 1st of the month for which it is due.

No member will take part in any discussions on politics during any of the club's meetings or functions.

No gambling will be allowed within the club premises.

This might frighten away all the misers, self-made politicians, and amateur gamblers (professional gamblers would never bother reading this article anyway).

But to the wise people who weigh the "pros and cons" and are determined to join the club, we say "Good for you" and reward you with yet more constitutional rubbish, without knowledge of which, you just cannot get in the club.

So pay attention to this:

All applications for membership of the above named club will be addressed to the Chairman, who will supply the application forms on request.

Membership application forms must be filled out in full. Partly filled forms will be automatically rejected.

The Chairman and the Committee reserve the right to accept or reject any application for membership, and their decision in the matter is final.

No communication by telephone will be entered into.

Letters of application should be addressed to:

The Chairman, Aircraft Enthusiasts' Club, 10, Po Shan-road, Hongkong.

All letters of complaint should be sent to the wrong address!

EACH year in December, the A.E.C. is invited to a luncheon and tank tactic demonstration by the 1st Royal Tank Regiment. Members are shown inspecting the Comet tanks at Lowu.

Scientists hope to make electricity from chemicals

CHEMICAL FUEL... BURNED IN ENGINE... RUNS GENERATOR... TO MAKE ELECTRICITY

MOST ELECTRICITY IS MADE BY BURNING A FUEL — A CHEMICAL REACTION — TO PRODUCE ENERGY WHICH, IN TURN, SPINS A GENERATOR, A LONG PROCESS.

THERE SHOULD BE A SHORT CUT.

ELECTRICITY, IN VERY SMALL AMOUNTS, IS PRODUCED DIRECTLY BY CHEMICAL REACTION IN DRY CELL BATTERIES — A FORM OF FUEL CELL.

BUT THE CHEMICALS ARE SOON EXHAUSTED AND THE BATTERY IS "DEAD".

FUEL CELLS THAT WILL MAKE ELECTRICITY CONTINUOUSLY FROM A CHEMICAL REACTION ARE NEARING A PRACTICAL STAGE.

SCIENTISTS ARE WORKING ON MANY DIFFERENT KINDS OF FUEL CELLS. EACH, IT IS HOPED, WILL LAST AND MAKE ELECTRICITY INDEFINITELY, AS LONG AS CHEMICALS ARE SUPPLIED TO IT.

We are more than pleased to see that the Aircraft Enthusiasts' Club will once again be active.

And it is heartening to see another club coming up that places stress on activities of worthwhile interest.

Congratulations to Mr A. P. Lee who gave us this interesting article.

I am sure that all the members of the 17/21 Club will take note.

STORIES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By MAX TRELL
KNARF, the Shadow-Boy with the Turned-Around Name ran down the street. As he ran, he sang.

This is the song he sang:
"I know a man
His name is Gus.
He drives an enormous
Blue-green bus.
He drives the bus
Across the town,
And does his driving
Sitting down."

Gus The Bus Driver

—He Couldn't Take Knarf On Any Long Trips—

Just as he finished the song, Knarf reached the corner. He bumped into a tall man wearing a blue cap and a blue coat and green trousers. The man was standing next to a big bus painted blue and green.
"Hello, Gus," said Knarf.
"Hello, Knarf," said Gus the Bus Driver. "Are you coming in my bus this morning?"

"Maybe," said Knarf. "Where are you going?"
"Where do you want to go?"
said Gus the Bus Driver.

A long trip

"I'd like to take a long trip," said Knarf.
"Long trip?" asked Gus the Bus Driver.
He reached under his coat and took a long thin book out of the pocket of his green trousers.
"What's in that book?" asked
Knarf.
"In this book," said Gus the Bus Driver, "are all the places where my bus can go."
Gus the Bus Driver turned several pages.
"Here we are," he said.
"Here's a place called Luna-ville."
"Where's Lunaville?" asked
Knarf.

On the moon

"Lunaville," said Gus the Bus
Driver, "is on the moon."
"That's wonderful, Gus!" said

Knarf, as he started to go inside the bus. "I'd like very much to go to Lunaville on the moon."

"Ah," said Gus the Bus Driver, as he put out his hand and stopped Knarf from entering the bus. "Just a minute!
It says here that my bus can only go to Lunaville on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Today is Saturday."

"Oh, that's a shame!" sighed Knarf. "Where else can we go?"

"Here's another place," said
Gus the Bus Driver. "It's called Jungle Junction."

"Jungle Junction," repeated Knarf. His eyes sparkled with interest. "Where's Jungle Junction?"

"Jungle Junction," said Gus the Bus Driver, "is in the middle of Africa."

"I'd LOVE to go there!"
shouted Knarf.

Again he started inside the bus, but again Gus the Bus Driver put out his hand and stopped him.

"Too bad," said Gus the Bus Driver. "I just noticed that we only go to Jungle Junction at ten o'clock in the morning. And now it's half past two."

"All off!" shouted Gus
the Bus Driver.

"Oh, what a shame!" cried Knarf. "Isn't there some place we can go?"

"For several minutes, Gus the Bus Driver studied his book.

"There's just one place," he said. "I know we can go there."
"Where is it, Gus?" asked
Knarf.

"We can go to Lamppost Corner between the mailbox and the maple tree."

"That's right where we are now!" Knarf exclaimed.

Gus the Bus Driver shrugged and put his book away.

So Knarf went into the bus and sat down for a minute. And Gus shouted: "We're there! All off!" and Knarf ran all the way home singing the Bus Song about Gus.

Rupert and the Sky-boat—14

The newcomer moves towards the little pals. He is wearing dark glasses and carrying a satchel and looks rather grim. "Who are you?" he asks. "How came you?" he asks. "What do you want?"
"Oh, please, we saw some odd flying things and we wanted to find out where they came from and what they were. Your wire gate was open so we came in and . . . and please may we go home now?" Rupert begins to sound frightened, but the other, instead of answering him, walks thoughtfully to shut the gate and secure it.

Johnny Mathis is coming

I HAVE just heard that Johnny Mathis is coming to Hongkong.

My source of information hasn't failed me yet, so you can be almost certain that Mathis will be here shortly.

I am also told that plans are in the making for him to perform here. He is reported to be making a Far Eastern tour that will take him to Manila and Tokyo before coming here.

I sincerely hope that whoever is attempting to put Mathis on stage here, will succeed. There hasn't been a singer in the last ten years who has captured the imagination of the record fans as has this handsome young Negro vocalist.

Mathis raised the bar for proportions no other vocalist in years had been able to do.

All we can do here is to keep our fingers crossed.

I HAVE also been informed that "The Voice" will be making a return visit in the middle of next year.

Yes, Frank Sinatra is coming back, and I am told, he will be here for three months this time.

What is he up to? Well your guess is as good as mine at the moment. But don't be surprised if he comes armed with a movie script.

ANOTHER well-known actor due here in the near future is the "Viking" himself—Kirk Douglas.

We expect him sometime in January of next year.

BASIL Rathbone is due in on the 20th of this month.

NOTES ON NOTES

By CARL MYATT

Thomas whose brain child the club is.

Among those appearing in the big, three-quarters of an hour "live" variety programme are Larry Allen, the Fabulous Echoes and Thelma Toledo among others.

TWO of the three records I have chosen for review this week are connected with movies currently showing at local theatres.

From the Franz Liszt story, "Song Without End" Carmen Cavallaro plays his interpretations of some of the great music heard in the film. Cavallaro as you all know, supplied the music for the Eddy Duchin story, which album turned out to be a best seller. It now looks as though Cavallaro has another best seller on his hands.

In order to enhance the beauty of the music, many of the pieces have been slightly condensed and adapted for orchestral accompaniment. The orchestra is under the baton of Jack Fleis.

Tunes you'll hear include "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2", the lovely and exciting "Liebestraum", and "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1."

Cavallaro has a hand in all the arrangements.

(On Decca DL 78999.)

I wonder how many of you have heard a Louis Prima-Keely Smith Album. If you have heard any of the recordings of his wonderful husband and wife combination, you must surely have been struck by the driving music supplied by tenor saxophonist Sam Butera and the Witnesses.

Sam recently made his film debut in "The Rat Race" currently showing at the King's Theatre, and has now come out with an album featuring tunes heard in this picture which incidentally stars Tony Curtis and Debbie Reynolds.

With the exception of parts one and two of "The Theme From Rat Race," the tunes are old ones.

"At Sundown," "Out Of Nowhere" and "Two Sleepy People" on side one and "Lullaby Of Birdland" and "Manhattan" on side two were my favourites. A good record for dancing.

The beat is infectious.

On Dot DLP 3306

Capitalising on the Off-Beat Cha, Cha craze in this part of the world, Tico have put out a complete album of Joe Loco's interpretations of this new and fascinating beat.

This is indeed a prize collection and the first of its kind. For my money, Joe Loco (real Name Jose Esteves) plays the finest Latin American dance music. It's tremendously exciting stuff, but at the same time simple and yet original. Most of the material on this album is taken at a medium to quick tempo. Nothing too slow or too fast.

Some of the best tunes are: "There'll Be Some Changes Made", "Stardust", "Why Don't You Do Right", "Way Marie" and "Tenderly".

On Tico LP-1006.

THIS week, let's attack the problem of having nothing to do. Never worried you? Consider yourself lucky. So many of my friends complained about being bored, I went to the lost and found department to retrieve my thinking cap.

Actually, there are thousands of things you can do. And you can come up with entirely unexpected results too.

During the summer vacation, many of my schoolmates took a summer job. A little persuasion from my brother had me feverishly answering advertisements. I never expected anything to come of them — fresh out of school, absolutely inexperienced — qualifications nil. If your father practically owned a company, you could be all of that and look like something out of a bad dream to boot — and still get a job.

Anyway, what did happen was that a couple of my wacky letters went astray which resulted in my getting to know some pretty nice people.

I do not suggest you dash off now and write a letter; such things only happen to me. One of my letters went to someone who wanted an amah! I can just imagine myself — in a pigtail, scrubbing floors — and falling over them. It just goes to show what could happen to you!

Gardening

Ever try gardening? No green thumb? That is one argument you don't have a leg to stand on. Let me tell you something. Try Climbing Ivy. How? Just walk up to a wall and tear a piece off. When you get home, stick it into a plot of earth — any plot of earth. Water it. It will grow.

Then with your self confidence firmly established, try ferns. Walk up to a wall, or the hillside; tear a piece off, etc. When you have tired of them, graduate to plants.

You like flowers? Try a crocus or a violet. Unless your fingers are a moving mass of destruction, they will grow.

The results are guaranteed to give you pleasure, especially if you have forgotten about it. You plant your ill-gotten crocus which, in your haste, you pulled from a flower bed completely rootless. You water it, but it sort of gives up on you and lays down its arms gracefully. You decide its dead. You leave it in the garden and forget about it. Two weeks later you happen to pass by the spot. It is flowering! The flower may look a little mangled, but there will be a bud to console you. It's uncanny, but immensely satisfying.

Or you could try vines or any other kind of plant that is an example of vegetative propagation. There is nothing you can do to discourage them—short of burning them!

The arts

How about writing poetry? Painting? Composing a song? Writing a song is easy—especially a hit song—our modern definition, or a miserable excuse for the real thing. Behold!

Boy ya-ya-ya-ya, Boy meets girl. o-o-o-o-ohhhhh!
Boy ya-ya-ya, girl ya-ya-ya o-o-o-weeee
Boy ya-ya-ya-ya, Boy meets girl. o-o-o-o-ohhhhh!
wah-co-wah-co-wah, wah, dum, dum, dum, o-o-o-o-ohhhhh!

Finis. Top tune of the week

Who knows, if you chose that for a career, you might earn enough not to afford paying your income tax!

Travel

For the more conservative people. Have you ever taken a busride to a strange part of town, somewhere you have never been to? You might be surprised at the many spots you will discover. What about taking a long ride just to observe your fellow human beings? There are so many different varieties of this species, it ought to be interesting.

Experiment

Perhaps you are more cultured? What about a concert, art exhibition, browsing at a bookshop? Put on a pair of glasses, muss up your hair, wear a slept-in version of your school uniform, and with tie askew peer near-sightedly at the shelves. If that does not work, mutter to yourself occasionally, stop in the middle of doing something and look around vaguely, that ought to do the trick — the sales personnel will do more than avoid you, they will run!

JUST completed filming at Associated British Elstree Studios is "Hand in Hand" a heart-warming study of a little Roman Catholic boy and a Jewish girl whose friendship is threatened by the differences in their religious beliefs.

How they overcome their problem with typical childish logic and a refreshing disregard for adult narrow-mindedness, provides the central theme for this unusual story. "Hand in Hand" is produced by Helen Winston for Associated British and directed by Philip Leacock.

TOP DIRECTOR

The screenplay by Diana Morgan—from an original story by Leopold Atlas—provides a brilliant insight into the minds and reactions of two children who find sadly that the older they get, the more complicated life becomes.

The finely-observed story is projected by director Leacock—who established his reputation as a top director with his memorable "The Kidnappers"—with a warmth and feeling in the finest traditions of the cinema.

Playing the two children who eventually overcome the basic differences between their two religions, are Loretta Parry and Philip Needs, while the adult cast is headed by John Gregson, Dame Sybil Thorndike and Finlay Currie, with Derek Sydney, Miriam Karlin, Kathleen Byron and Arnold Diamond.

"Hand in Hand," photographed by Freddie Young, was shot on location around London and at the Associated British Studios in Borehamwood, Herts.

HONGKONG HIT PARADE

By Ted Thomas

THE big event of the week for Hongkong's popular music lovers is the party that will be held in the Queen Elizabeth School, Kowloon today to celebrate the passing of the four-thousand figure for members of Radio Hongkong's Chinese network programme "Mun Wui".

Radio Hongkong got together an all star cast reminiscent of the old Radio Clubhouse days when the station set a new pattern in big live entertainment shows which soon caught on.

Stars of the afternoon's party records had made the Top are Larry Allen and Thelma Twenty or not, (and why should Toledo two famous night-club he?) has sneaked within smiling artists who need no further range of the magic 20 with his latest "Nice 'n' Easy". Listed this week as number 28, this looks like a sure bet for the crystal ball.

The big attraction for Rock 'n Roll fans will be the personal appearance by "The Fabulous Echoes", who oblige with anything from the big beat complete with twangy guitars and vocal, to a sophisticated rendering of the latest craze The Offbeat Cha Cha.

"Offbeat"

On the subject of "Offbeat" two of the stars of the best selling disc "Offbeat in Hong Kong" will be on hand to give a turn Marilyn Palmer, winner of many a talent competition, and Chico Rosa Periera popularly known as Hongkong's Paul Anka.

But perhaps the biggest innovation in the whole show is the resident band, "The Jazz-makers". Broadcasting for only their second time they carry the full weight of the musical side of the show.

A big swing band in the grand Basie-Ellington style is something of a rarity these days, at least as far as Hongkong goes, and this gave everyone a chance to really hear and watch the finest line-up of its type to be had around these parts. The programme will be broadcast over the English network of Radio Hongkong at 7.00 pm on Tuesday 11th October.

With the "Mun Wui" figure now way past the four thousand mark and leaping forward to five thousand, the club has lived up to its boast of being the fastest growing club in the Colony. Two months ago just after its start "Mun Wui" could muster only one twentieth of the strength of its nearest rival. Nowadays it has enrolled well over half and is rushing on to overtake all in its path.

FRANK Sinatra, never one to worry about whether his Nothing, it seems, can keep Connie Francis out of the Hit Parade.

The girl with a sob in her voice has made it pay off to such an extent that almost every disc she cuts is an immediate candidate for a spot in the top twenty. Her latest success, a seemingly unimpressive little number called "My Heart Has a Mind Of It's Own" is already holding top spot in the United States and has been listed here for several weeks.

The Dawg and I

"AND so, you see, poor Babykins will be all alone," she moaned in tragic tones.

I sat there nervously trying to return the glare which the object of the conversation—a great big mangy black hound—was directing at me.

I sat as still as possible, not being over anxious to come in contact with those teeth.

I never did like Babykins (that was the beast's name—which I always considered rather inappropriate).

However, when my friend, Ginny, who was going out for the day, plaintively told me about Babykins being left all alone, I kind of felt that she was about to offer me the privilege of caring for the hound—and sure enough, she did!

"Oh, 'er, really Ginny, I'd love to look after your dog for you, but..."

Stutter

"Good," said the obliging damsel. "I knew you'd be thrilled to look after my baby for me." And she launched on a whole list of do's and don'ts. Stuttering was all I could manage in the way of protest. But I was stuck with the dog, though stuck was putting it mildly.

Overcome by gratitude, Babykins thanked me by putting her two front paws on my shoulders and licking my face all over—not forgetting behind the ears—sandwiching me between the wall and a doggy tongue.

"See?" says Ginny, "she loves you already, don't you, my itsy-bitsy 'little honey-bun'?" Well, Toni old thing, thought I, let's see you wriggle out of this one.

The four-footed fiend padded round and round watching me; I felt rather like an amoeba under a microscope. I centred my mind on a means of escape.

When Ginny came back with the leash for Babykins, I was slashing away with a horse-whip.

"Just trying it out," said I. "Just what do you need that for?" said she, aghast.

I coolly informed her that I thought people always used whips on dogs and that I'd take it along just in case.

Moron

"Let me put the leash on," I said waving away her protests. I tightened the collar as much as I could and Ginny's eyeballs literally stood out of her head as the brute gave a wheeze or two.

Suddenly I let it loose. "It's no use!" I said, "I can't get to the last hole." Ginny glared. "You're not supposed to," she spluttered. "Then what's it there for?" I asked, playing the moron.

She didn't say anything but gave me a look that made up for that!

I said brightly, "I can hang on pretty tightly to her tail—See?"

She saw!

"Oh, I'm dying to take you home," I said to the dog, which was now eyeing me suspiciously.

"Don't you worry about his vitamin pills, Ginny," I said airily, "I've a whole lot of them at home and I'll give him several after meals. But do you know something? That dog next door nearly died when I gave him some; do you know why?"

She didn't! But she thought Babykins had better not go after all because she didn't want me to go to any bother.

"Oh, it's no bother—No Sir! I'm crazy about your dog!"

I protested as she ushered me, dogless, to the door.

"I'll take him with me on the trip," she said, ignoring what I said about black hounds being forbidden on greyhound buses.

This bath doesn't seem fun, but the Finnish love it

YOU don't take a bath in Finland — at least not the kind taken in other parts of the world. You take what is known as a sauna.

Good-sized stones are heated and placed on the floor of the sauna room. Then water is poured over them. This, of course, produces steam. The bather sits or lies stretched out in the steam, perspiring freely.

After he is thoroughly steamed up someone takes a tree limb with tiny branches and beats him without it, striking his entire body. One would think this would be anything but a pleasant experience, but the Finns love it. For one thing the switching process improves the blood circulation.

The final act of this strange drama consists of going out of the sauna house and rolling in the snow or jumping into a cool running stream. Sometimes buckets of cold water are poured on the bather. The steam, of course, opens the pores of the skin while the snow or cold water closes them, thus reducing the chance of catching cold.

A friend of mine was introduced to the sauna while he was staying for a few days at a Finnish farmhouse. After watching several men of the household take a sauna he was asked if he wouldn't like one.

"At first he said, 'Nothing doing. It looks cruel to me. It may be all right for you Finns because you're used to it, but I'm afraid it would be too rugged for me.'"

Later, however, he changed his mind and decided to try it. The host whipped him with a piece of bush after the steaming process was concluded. It stung quite sharply. But as the switching continued he sensed a wonderful glow of health come over him. He felt pepped up and greatly invigorated. And he also felt wonderfully clean.

THE DEVIL'S FOOTPRINTS

IN a period when the mystery of the abominable snowman still casts a looming shadow across the scientific world, the man in the street may like to know that these strange footprints in the snow are by no means the first recorded in history.

One of the earliest visitations from the unknown ever recorded occurred in England one wintry night over 100 years ago.

It was a night that men in Devonshire will long remember—that night of February 1, 1853.

Some strange creature, whose identity was never discovered—or presence explained, was abroad in the fields.

In the deep snow it left a trail of footprints, the like of which no one had ever seen before.

In size and shape they resembled those of a large hooved creature. But they preceded each other in a straight line as if made by a tightrope walker.

The tracks passed through 17 towns for a distance of 100 miles, left the roads and crossed fields, woods and gardens, ran along the tops of fences, stopped on a river bank and resumed its course on the other side.

It even passed over farmhouse roofs like the line of a pencil. No one in the area of the tracks saw or heard anything. For weeks, all England was puzzled by the weird footprints. Scientists declared that no known animal could have made them or pursued such a peculiar course.

Superstitious souls were sure that Satan himself had crossed the countryside that night.

The truth was never discovered.

To this day, the mystery of the "Devil's Footprints" remains unsolved.

Patricia Lewis

I FIRST discovered Ernie Kovacs two years ago crouched on the floor of Irving Lazar's living-room in Beverly Hills.

He was smoking a huge cigar and shooting craps with Dean Martin, Tony Curtis, and Sammy Davis Jr. The dice were Gary Cooper's.

When I next discovered Mr Kovacs he was crouched on the floor at Elstree Studios, smoking a huge cigar and pouring over sheets and sheets of blueprints.

"Hi!" he waved in my direction. "I'm building a new studio on to my place and you've gotta keep an eye on things even when you're 6,000 miles away."

"Here!" he went on, pulling me down beside him. "Have a look! It's gonna be great. There's a circular three-place here, see? And a wine cellar underneath that bit... (I've just laid in a stock of '50 clarets that'll be superb in a few years) ... and a waterfall runs down beside these steps into a pool with fish and stuff."

"And I'm going to put my desk—I've got a great big desk—along the wall here and have lots of shelves running all along the back there."

"What's that?" asked, pointing to a square in one corner.

A LOT...

"Oh, that's the best room in the house—the steam room. I spend hours in there. It's the thing I miss most about being away from home..."

"And that?"

"That's the electric turntable in the carport, so you only have to press a button and you're facing the way out—saves all that clutter in the drive when you've got a lot of cars."

From all of which I gathered that Mr Kovacs (since his tremendous success in "Our Man in Havana" and "Strangers When We Meet") has hit the big-time in movies after years in radio and television.

Still gazing at the plans I noticed the address at the foot: Bowmont-street.

Mr. Kovacs forestalled me.

"Yeah, Sinatra lives up at the top. Funny! We built a toilet near the front gate for 'the workmen' and one morning around 7 am I'd gone down to get the mail when Frank drove past, 'isn't it a little chilly for that sort of thing?' he said. It's really time you got something fixed inside the house."

THE CONFESSIONS OF AN IMMODERATE MAN

Yet despite his close friendship with Sinatra and Dean Martin, Ernie Kovacs does not subscribe to what is popularly known as "the Clan."

"I have a serious antipathy to groups," he said.

"My wife and I see a lot of the Billy Wilders, the Mervyn LeRois, and Dick Quina and Kim Novak. You see we like to go out a lot. I feel that once you start staying home and studying lines at night you take all the fun out of filming and if that happened to me then I'd rather give up and do something else."

JUST SIT...

Not that Mr Kovacs would have trouble finding something else to do. He has a weekly television show, he's writing a second novel (the film rights have been bought for the first), a book of his sketches is due for publication soon, between publication he seeks out foods, wines, and whisky to enjoy.

"My wife says I do nothing in moderation," chuckled the happy, black-eyed Hungarian. "I like volumes of everything—books, movies, what it is. I'm a matter of what it is. I like a lot of it. Why I cut up London—Edie and I must have walked five miles one Sunday just looking at everything like a couple of hicks. And when I was here doing 'Our Man in Havana,' I bought so much cheese to take home we'll still be eating it in 1969."

"You know, I'm going to fit out my cellar with a heavy table, a low chandelier and lots of cheeses so you can just sit down there with the wine..."

He broke off as Mario Zapi walked in.

"Hi, Mario baby!"

"Hi, Ernie!" said Mr Zapi, producer of Mr Kovacs' film "Five Golden Hours."

"I tell you this, guy is a gourmand like I never see. When we were on location in Italy he drove 2 1/2 hours into Verona every night just to get a good meal."

"Yeah—and see where it got me," said Kovacs. "I must be 18lb. heavier than when I arrived. I look like Wallace Beery's father in the rushes. They're going to have to hold my chin up with wires if I don't diet."

"Don't be silly, boy," said Mr Zapi affectionately. "You look great."

AND TALK AS WELL?

UNFORTUNATELY my holiday precludes my attending a party where one is invited to sample some vodka "as an aperitif" and an aid to polite conversation.

That last line lets out most of the vodka-drinkers I know, but I, perhaps Viscountess Olga Tar-bat—who is the one requesting the pleasure—knows lighter drinkers with more polite conversation than I do.

IT'S TOUGH ON THAT TOTEM

ONE-TIME Sadler's Wells ballerina Gillian Lynne has come to the surprising conclusion that life in the musical comedy world is much tougher than when you're pointing up the classics.

"I've lost pounds since dancing the 'Totem Tom Tom' sequence in 'Rose Marie,'" she told me at the Victoria Palace. "It's the most strenuous thing I've ever done—I finish by spinning up the totem pole. And now I have to eat glucose, vitamins, and chocolate to keep my weight up. When I was at the Wells I lived on a solid diet of steak and spinach to keep my weight down."

That's show business.

THE MAN FOR M15

YVES MONTAND in "Let's Make Love" plays a man who can't sing, dance or tell funny stories although in reality he's accomplished at all three.

VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

ALWAYS a great one for old status and new gadgets, Susan Wilding has a fresh acquisition—a tape recorder. Its presence is more functional than you'd fancy. Every day Mrs Wilding dictates to it yet another episode from her technicoloured life, starting at the age of five.

After five weeks she's got as far as her first marriage. Prospective publishers are already queuing.

I LIKE the style of comedians Allen and Rossi at the Pigalle.

Sample?

Marty Allen: "I'm a bullfighter."

Stevan Rossi: "Do you like being a bullfighter?"

Marty Allen: "I can't stand it—but I like the music."

HOLLYWOOD? IT'S HARD TO TAKE, SIGHS ROCK

Santa Margherita.

ROCK HUDSON is one of those wholesome, white-toothed, clean-cut Hollywood-bred actors who strike an emotional chord in the hearts of middle-aged matrons the world over.

Some wholesome is he, indeed, so munchy-crunchy, that one suspects that—were his star-rating ever to diminish—he could always be ground up into an excellent breakfast food.

All six-foot-four of him radiates health; vigour, the beach, Coke, convertibles, and the American Way of Life.

And, at 34, he is one of the biggest box-office stars in the world.

Women from five continents write love letters to him. ("I can milk cows, speak French, dive from low heights, and cycle 80 miles a day," wrote one English woman. "I'd make the perfect wife for you.") And he has twice been voted the top money-making star.

Seriously

Obviously then, whatever it is the great film-going public yearns for on its screens, Mr Hudson is the man to provide it.

He has been here on the Italian Riviera during the past week starring in his first independent production. Come, September, so I invited him to luncheon, and over the figs and prosciutto he gave me the run down.

that sort of deal. I wanted to be free, so I gave up Ben-Hur. "You say you hate your name (he was born Roy Fitzgerald)? You ought to be used to it by now."

"Oh, I'm getting sort of used to it. My agent, Henry Willson, gave it to me because he wanted quick recognition for me."

"I suppose I was lucky not to have drawn some of the other horrors that were being bandied about—Crash and Brick were two of them."

"When do you suppose people began taking you seriously as an actor?"

"After Magnificent Obsession, when I appeared opposite Jane Wyman, who was an established star."

"Oddly enough it was a remake of the pre-war picture in which Irene Dunne helped make a star out of the young Robert Taylor. This one did the same thing for me. Then I made Giant, and after that, people stopped sneering."

"Do you consider your height and looks have counted against you rather than for you?"

"Against me"

"I think, in the beginning, they counted against me. But you know, if you are in reasonable shape to begin with, and you eventually learn to act, you have a better chance of achieving stardom than if you start out being talented but look like the back of a bus. Given enough pictures, one can't help learning to act."

'I CANNOT STAND PEOPLE PRYING INTO MY PRIVATE LIFE THE WHOLE TIME...

One reason

"Do you know that when I returned from my honeymoon I was interviewed by a fan magazine writer?" asked Mr Hudson, what do you and your wife do at night?"

"I was so mad I said: 'Oh, my wife strips off and dances for me on the coffee table.'"

"All that nonsense in 'Hollywood' is hard to take, too."

A man once came up to me at a filling station and said: 'Say, mister, where about do all the stars live?' As though he were looking for a zoo.

"Oh, I said, 'Just round the corner in a barnacle. You'll find them there. They all live together in one big room."

In a lifetime reporting crime...the best untold story he knows

THIS IS THE BIGGEST MYSTERY

THE COFFIN BURIED EIGHT INCHES DOWN IN LAND FLOODED CONSTANTLY BY THE RIVER

by PERCY HOSKINS

CONFIDANT of kings... guardian of State secrets... convicted trafficker in royal honours. John Maundy Gregory was all of these. He surrounded himself with intrigue and mystery. But the biggest mystery of Maundy Gregory concerned his relationship with the woman who died at his home.

THE certificate recording the death in Maundy Gregory's house of Mrs Edith Marion Rosse, 59-year-old actress, stated that she had succumbed on September 11, 1932, to a seizure caused by cerebral hemorrhage and chronic Bright's disease. It was to be proved false.

For almost ten years Edith Rosse—separated from her husband Frederick Rosse, musical comedy conductor and composer of the incidental music to "The Merchant of Venice"—had lived in a house in St John's Wood where she passed herself off as Gregory's sister.

Her sudden death at 59 at a time when Gregory's financial resources were at a low ebb disturbed her relatives. They were not happy about a deathbed will, written on the back of a restaurant menu in Gregory's handwriting, which read: "Everything I have [and this amounted to some £18,600] to be left to Mr J. Maundy Gregory to be disposed of as he thinks best and in accordance of what I should desire."

The relatives recalled that a few weeks before her death Mrs Rosse had confided to them that she had destroyed an earlier will at Gregory's suggestion. She also said that Gregory had been pressing her for money and had mortgaged everything he could.

The relatives also wondered why Mrs Rosse had been buried in an unmarked coffin at Bisham, near Maidenhead, in a Thames riverbank churchyard which always seemed to be under water.

Was it because the continual rise and fall of the river would eliminate any trace of poison?

These fears were communicated to the authorities and an exhumation was ordered.

Rueful

As the coffin was raised from its riverside grave a cascade of water poured out and I noticed a rueful smile flit across the face of Dr Roche Lynch, the Home Office analyst, as he turned to his assistant and murmured three cryptic words: "Not a chance!" Before a coroner's inquest could be summoned, however, it was discovered that, defying a subpoena issued for his attendance, Maundy Gregory, recently released from prison, had hurriedly left the country.

When, a few days later, I traced him to Paris, Gregory said this wonderful friendship of his with Mrs Rosse was "no vulgar intrigue."

The world had known them as brother and sister, that, indeed, had been their relationship.

Drama crept into his narrative as he described the sudden illness which ended in her death. He was lunching with the ex-King of Greece at a West End restaurant when the telegram came summoning him home. He stood by her bedside, "Quick," she cried. "Pen and paper."

He fumbled in his pocket and drew out of it the luncheon menu card. And on that the will was written. A few days later, after they had had dinner together, came another seizure, just at recovery seemed certain.

The doctors could not save her. Mrs Rosse lingered until the next day. But at the time she died Gregory had another luncheon appointment with the ex-King of Greece. This he kept. ("I felt no good purpose would be served by postponing it.")

And then he went in search of a grave for his "dear sweet friend" by the riverside, where many of their happiest hours had been spent.

He told of the difficulties he encountered, how he had finally offered a hundred guineas for the parish fund if permission could be given to him to lay her where he wished. A church warden's consent was necessary.

He found one. He was a butler and he was at a whisk drive.

But Gregory induced him to leave the game and sign the necessary papers.

On the question of the actual grave, Gregory made this significant observation, "I did not like to think there should be a great weight of earth over poor Mrs Rosse, so I ordered that as shallow a grave as possible should be dug, and also gave instructions that the coffin should not be sealed."

And in those odd circumstances the former actress was buried.

Inquest

Meanwhile, at the inquest in London, the coroner was being told that in 15 years of marriage Mrs Rosse had never expressed a wish to be buried near the River Thames.

And Sir Bernard Spilsbury, the Home Office pathologist, testified that there had been no hemorrhage of the brain, there were no signs of Bright's disease. In fact, the death certificate had been completely wrong.

On the other hand, there was nothing to show the real cause of death, though there were poisons which could produce the symptoms described.

Verdict

Dr Roche Lynch, the analyst, said that the top of the coffin was only eight inches below ground level; in fact, he had never seen so shallow a grave. The churchyard was constantly flooded by the river and the body must have been immersed in water for some months.

An analysis of the organs revealed no trace of poison, but added Dr Lynch "in view of the time that has elapsed since death and the condition to which the body has been subjected, it is quite possible that certain poisons could have been decomposed thus rendering their detection impossible."

Winding up the inquiries, the coroner remarked: "Mr Maundy Gregory appears to have been a man of some substance. But towards the beginning of 1932 his financial position became rapidly worse until, about August, he was in difficulties owing some thousands of pounds and apparently not having funds wherewith to discharge his debts."

"I do not wish to emphasise the point which has been mentioned that certain drugs do decompose when exposed or when they have been buried in soil, waterlogged or otherwise. All I will say is that no poison has been found and therefore no possible charge can arise out of this inquiry and there must be an open verdict."

Extortion?

So Maundy Gregory, out of the reach of the law and his creditors, continued to live in Paris on a magnificent scale. When funds began to get low there would be telephone calls to London and across the Channel would go dozens of little Patisserie, formerly head waiter at the famous London club where Gregory gave money parties to those interested in securing titles.

From what source did Gregory derive his income while in exile?

Perhaps only Mazzina knew, although it must be remembered that Gregory had gone between of such high social rank that if he had not pleaded guilty when charged at Bow-street a first-rate social and political scandal would have developed.

It may well be that he extorted further money from those holding the titles he procured by simply suggesting that poverty was forcing him to sell his secrets for publication.

The war brought Gregory's life of extravagance to a sharp and sudden end. France was overrun, and he was arrested by the first detachment of the Gestapo to reach Paris. Nothing more was heard of this incredible figure until it became known that he had died one year after his arrest in a German military hospital, probably as a result of ill-treatment at the hands of Heinrich Himmler's men.

When after the war, I went to Paris and scrutinised the official records I noticed that the cause of death had been discreetly omitted.

And so this alleged descendant of kings, who lavishly entertained the kings and statesmen of his time, passed to his alien grave unhonoured and unmourned.

The yellow book—and the scandal that broke it...

A STUDY IN YELLOW. by Katherine Lyon Mix.

ALL of a sudden yellow became the fashionable colour. London bookshops were like a field of daffodils on the morning of April 15, 1894, with the glaring cover of the new-born magazine, The Yellow Book.

Yellow was smart. It was also, for some strange reason, wicked. When Wilde proposed—until the censor stopped him—to produce his Salome in a London theatre, he arranged that everything on the stage was to be in shades of yellow. Very decadent, very naughty.

A fascination with Sin was much to the fore. It arrived about the same time as the New Woman.

By George Malcolm Thomson

New women

The New Woman was the old woman wearing bloomers on bicycles ("Would you like it if your sister showed her legs?") indignant children, asked one another) and demanding the Two Freedoms—to love and to vote.

Some of them got the First Freedom early in the struggle. It was mockingly said at the time that the New Woman had ceased to be a lady without becoming a gentleman.

The New Woman was strongly represented among the Yellow Book's contributors and subscribers.

The magazine was conceived during a terrible London fog on New Year's Day, 1894. The idea came to a young American writer, Henry Harland, and to Aubrey Beardsley, the artist. Next day they "sold" it to John Lane, the publisher. Harland was editor and Beardsley art editor.

Wrong book

Three years after its first number appeared, the Yellow Book breathed its last. But, in fact, life had gone out of it long before that—on the day in 1897 when Lane handed in New York and read a newspaper headline, "Arrest of Oscar Wilde. Yellow Book under his arm."

For several reasons it was unjust to link the Wilde scandal with the magazine. Wilde's work never appeared in it. And the book under his arm at the time of arrest was a yellow-backed French novel.

Unfortunately, however, that was not the last word in the story. Shelley, one of the wretched youths in this unsavoury case, had been a clerk in Lane's publishing office at the time Wilde met him. Lane was compelled to deny by cable that he had made the fatal introduction.

Then six of Lane's authors sent an ultimatum demanding that Beardsley be removed from the art editorship of the Yellow Book. Lane's deputy in London, Frederic Chapman, gave way.

Mrs Mix wrote her history of the famous magazine first as a thesis for the University of Kansas. The book is as painstaking as might be expected in the circumstances. It is, however, a little more interesting. So far as I am concerned, Mrs Mix can have her degree.

But one question remains obstinately unanswered: What did the Yellow Book stand for? What movement or cause, literary or social, did it serve? Whose genius did it discover? What, in fact, was all the excitement about?

The perplexed reader of Mrs Mix's book can only give a doubtful shake of the head. To him it will seem that the Yellow Book was like a small stone thrown into one of the backwaters of literature.

SATURDAY SPORTS SPOT

HONGKONG'S HAPPY MAN OF SPORT

What a dreary, weary place this troubled old world would be without the colourful eye-catching personalities who all too infrequently brighten the scene.

By the same token the sports field would likewise be a potentially dismal spot if it were not for the talented jesters who successfully combine skill and a spirit of light-heartedness when engaged in even the most serious competition.

How fortunate this Colony is to have as its new knock-out lawn bowls singles champion a versatile ever smiling 'Frank' Barros.

Surely there is no more popular sportsman in our midst today. The Craighower bowler has the unique ability to muck his power of concentration behind a cheerful smile, and his readiness to applaud the best efforts of his opponent has won for him a special place in the lawn bowls world.

On Wednesday I watched him play through several gruelling rounds on his way to the knock-out singles championship. Under a blistering sun and against some of the finest lawn bowlers in the Colony he smiled and hand-clapped his way to a grand victory which was the perfect climax to a competition which was as strenuous on our sporting calendar.

Tremendous asset

Sportsmen of this class and disposition are a tremendous asset to any game. They bring to it a spirit which lifts it out of the rut of mundane things; they make playing seem worthwhile... and above all they create an atmosphere in which even an opponent can feel relaxed.

Sitting on the sidelines at the Kowloon Bowling Green Club on Wednesday I talked about Barros to one who has played against him many times and I was most interested in his comments.

He said: "Playing against Frank Barros is one of the things I look forward to on the bowling green each year. Those who do not know him can be easily misled into the belief that he does not really care how the game is going... but in that they make the biggest mistake of their lives. For all his carefree demeanour he is still a fine player."

"His smile is as ready when he is losing as when he is winning and when an opponent produces a first class shot... or scores off a lucky wick... the first congratulations come from Barros.

"Some players find it hard to concentrate and have to struggle to focus their attention on the game in hand but somehow Frank seems to sail through the tensest situations untroubled by the thoughts of defeat or its consequences... yet there is no more dedicated or ardent player gracing the greens of this Colony today."

Tribute

"I will pay him the highest tribute I can by saying that no spectator sitting on the sidelines would be able to tell from his conduct whether he was winning or losing. His smile is the same all the time. He is a fine sportsman who well deserves any honours which come his way."

There would be many players ready to endorse these remarks and I predict that when the Hongkong Lawn Bowls Association holds its annual ball... the biggest single cheer of the evening will greet smiling Frank as he steps up to the rostrum to receive his trophy as knock-out singles champion of 1961.

Where and when has there ever been such a miserable miserly start to any football season as the one we have seen here this year?

The season is now three weeks old and many of the sides in the First Division have not yet kicked a ball in serious competition. What an absolute farce it is... particularly as soccer desperately needs good publicity.

This weekend we shall... if we are lucky... see two games played off but dear, oh dear, what sort of a way is this to run a senior football competition?

Switch of ideas?

The football public wants to see top-class stuff, yet after three weeks they have not had a glimpse of star-studded Eastern, Happy Valley, Kitebee or recently-promoted Caroline Hill in action. How can anyone really expect to arouse interest with such a half-cocked kick-off?

In the past the early weeks of each season were something of a soccer harvest as far as the fans were concerned. There were mid-week games galore... some people believed there were too many... but at least the fans had their football fare in full.

Why has there suddenly been such a switch of ideas? The fact that the Boundary Street Stadium is not yet ready for use is no argument at all for I have been at the Club and South China grounds on a number of occasions and found them empty... and of course the Hongkong Stadium was still without goal-posts when I saw it the other day.

Whatever reasons may be offered for the lack of soccer entertainment it certainly cannot be the one about shortage of grounds. Members of the Football Association are beginning to wonder why some teams have not yet made an appearance and not unexpectedly ugly rumours are going the rounds.

A sad state

In every other country which aspires to the top class the beginning of a new season is a great occasion. Things start off with a bang and the public is given a hefty reminder that 'King Football' is back. In fact he stamps his way demandingly into the public attention. Here, however, we have been treated to an unobtrusive quiet crawl and, judging by the relative amount of work they are doing many of the Hongkong FA Councilors would have to be fitter than their players. There has certainly been much more activity in the Committee Room than there has been on the field of play.

Senior football in this Colony is the community's most important sporting entertainment... and that position can only be justified—or maintained—by setting teams against each other on the field.

One has only to walk along to the valley each evening to see how badly the fans want to watch the local soccer stars in action. Crowds flock there just to see them at training... it's the only chance they have at the moment to see them kicking a ball about. What a sad state of affairs it all is!

In the mailbag this week there was one of these requests to me to 'settle a bet' by providing information on an unusual happening in football.

The question I was asked was: 'Has a goalkeeper ever scored a goal from a goal-kick while playing in first-class football?'

That really sent me searching through my library. I had to assume that the question referred to British football for I have no statistics on European continental football or on the game in South America... but much to my surprise I soon found out that such a thing had happened in England although there is no recorded report of it taking place in Scotland, Ireland or Wales.

A goal in one

To settle the bet the simple answer is that a goalkeeper has scored from a goal-kick while playing in first-class football.

Here is the actual extract from the records of such happenings:

"In the year 1900 while playing for Manchester City against Sunderland goalkeeper Williams took a goal-kick from the right-hand side of his goal. The ball, assisted by an unusually strong wind, sailed downfield towards the Sunderland end. Doig, the Sunderland goalkeeper, seemed to be surprised by the speed of the ball. Suddenly he realised that the wind was blowing it into his goal: he made a desperate

SPORTING SAM

by Reg. Wootton

London Express Service.

last second leap but although he got his hands to the ball it spun out of his fingers and crossed the line before he could retrieve it."

Thus was soccer history made 60 years ago and the only other record I can find that even comes close to equalling it is an unconfirmed report that a man called Louis Page, who kept goal for St Johnstone many years ago, hit the St Mirren crossbar with a goal-kick which like Williams' effort had the assistance of a high wind.

There you are boys... who ever said it had never been done can pay up, look cheerful and blame a man named Williams for the unusual achievement.

Rugby goes into full swing

SIX MATCHES SCHEDULED FOR THIS AFTERNOON

By 'PROP'

Increased activity marks the Rugger scene in the Colony this weekend. Club, Dragons and Recreio are all provided with fixtures against Service sides, whilst three other matches feature six sides from the Services.

At the Stadium, at 4.30 pm today, Club take on the Whitefield Wanderers and following this Dragons match with the Police "B" side. The latter fixture takes the place of the scheduled game between Dragons and the 17/21 Lancers. The Lancers have had to cry off owing to inability to raise a side.

Disappointment

This column hears from "usually reliable sources" that the Lancers have also scratched from their fixture for next Wednesday, when they are due to meet the 5th Field Regiment RA.

This is the first disappointment that the HKRFU have had this season with regard to fixtures, and it comes at a time when they are trying hard not to repeat the mistakes of last season. Surely it is not asking too much of team secretaries that they telephone the HKRFU Secretary when their team is unable to fulfill the engagements into which it has entered?

Police "B" who have filled the gap on Saturday should provide a certain amount of opposition for the Dragons, but I cannot force them being strong enough to win.

The Club should have little trouble in disposing of Whitefield Wanderers.

Royal Air Force have had two convincing wins over Police so far this season, and should know too much for Recreio. But make no mistake, these Portuguese lads are very keen indeed, and given a run of the ball, could surprise.

Charlottesville tipped to win tomorrow's L'Arc De Triomphe

Paris, Oct. 7.

The Aga Khan's Charlottesville to be ridden by Australia's crack jockey George Moore was today the top favourite to win Sunday's running of the fabulous 39th Prix De L'Arc De Triomphe classic French horse race at the Longchamps course in the fashionable West Paris suburbs.

Running with this crack race-horse over the 2,400-metre course for three-year-olds and above will be his half-brother Sheshoon, the best four-year-old in Europe. Italy adds an international flavour to the 25-horse field with its filly Santa Severa who "hates to be alone" and refuses to travel unless an ewe, its childhood companion shares the box.

Gerard, the French, race of the year is the record breaking French lottery worth more than one and half million pounds. Other French favourites include Flores and Delama belonging to French textile magnate Marcel Bous-sac, and Baron Guy De Rothschild's Timandra.

Despite the impressive field Sunday's race could be the race for the outsider.

After weeks of continuous rain the Longchamps track is more than heavy for this time of the year.

Added to this the final climb up to the final post has been lengthened to give the grandstand spectators a "good view for their money."

The extra run-in before the gruelling climb could help the game horse and rider that goes to the front and establishes a long lead.—A.P.

Callover on Autumn Double

London, Oct. 7.

With the coughing epidemic continuing in British racing establishments, there was only little business transacted last night at the Victoria Club callover on the the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgehire.

A new favourite Pinicola at 16 to one was found for the Cambridgehire, but there were only small sums for this little-raced son of Pinza who was a 28 to one chance last Monday.

For the Cesarewitch, Alcover, well backed after her smart win at Nottingham on Monday, hardened to four to one favourite. The Cesarewitch will be run next Wednesday and the Cambridgehire on October 26, both events being at Newmarket.

Prices

Prices at the callover were: 4-1 Alcover; 6-1 Pandolfi; 9-1 Shetler; 11-1 Radiation; 14-1 Premium; 18-1 Final Test; 25-1 Chester Peter and Aristarchus; 28-1 Angaz, Kalfroom and Sportan Green; 33-1 Adam Bede and Brasidas; 40-1 Felling in Love, Paridel and Miss Wisdom; 50-1 Master of Arts, Alcastus and Supreme Courage; 60-1 Shaddis and Augustine; 200-1 Pandaris.

CAMBRIDGEHIRE
18-1 Pinicola; 20-1 Bookmarker, Fagus, King's Troop, St Mark, Thames Trader, King's Messenger, Lucky Guy, and Tyler's Hill; 22-1 Fair Nicole; 25-1 Guinipier, Jeanne Michelle, Running Blue, Spring Madness, Durlinlan and Mountain King; 28-1 Golden Vision; 33-1 Sanctum, 50-1 Blast.—Reuter.

Army beat RAF in Inter-Services hockey match

By NUMPERE

In an Inter-Services friendly hockey match at Kai Tak last evening the Army defeated the Royal Air Force by nine goals to four.

The Army were on top from the start and the RAF defence, who have had an easy time so far this season, were under constant pressure.

Their inability to clear the ball hard to their wings never gave their forwards a chance to get going.

By half-time the Army were leading 5-1 with goals from Low, Holmes, Turner (2) and Narbu Lama whilst Thirbeck scored for the RAF.

The RAF improved a little in the second half but the Army kept the pressure on, and their defence showed the RAF just how the ball should be cleared upfield.

Turner and Narbu Lama both completed their hat-tricks and Low added another goal.

Stevenson, who did well for the RAF, netted twice and Downham who hardly saw the ball on the left wing scored another, but this was the Army's match and they ran out easy winners by 9-4.

THE TEAMS

RAF: Eade, Cooper, Hutton, Tye, Holmes, Beel, Hanley, Ryan, Stevenson, Thirbeck, Downham.
Army: Harris, Pettifer, Oliphant, Pearce, Beckett, Goodban, Holmes, Turner, Low, Narbu Lama, Frusher.

Real Madrid to play Barcelona in European Cup second round

Geneva, Oct. 7. Real Madrid, the holders of the trophy for the past five years, were drawn against their Spanish League rivals, Barcelona, in the second round of the European Football Cup, when the draw was made here today.

Real Madrid, who automatically qualified for the tournament as Cup-holders, beat Barcelona in last season's semi-final. But Barcelona edged out their rivals in an end-of-season clash for the Spanish League Championship.

The full draw is: Real Madrid (Spain) vs Barcelona (Spain); Burnley (England) vs Rhelms (France); IFK Malmo (Sweden) vs Juventus (Italy) or CDNA (Bulgaria); Aarhus (Denmark) vs Fredrikstad (Norway); Benfica (Portugal) vs Red Star (Yugoslavia) or Ujpesti Dorosa (Hungary); Young Boys (Switzerland) vs Hamburg (W. Germany); Rapid Vienna (Austria) vs Wismuth (E. Germany) or Glentworth (Northern Ireland); Spartak (Czechoslovakia) vs Panathinaikos (Greece).

The first-named teams are at home in the first leg of the home-and-away tie.—Reuter.

Relaxed laws

Since the war, during which the Rugby Union relaxed the laws separating amateurs and professionals, some great League players have enjoyed their spell in the Union with its more social atmosphere and more friendly rivalries.

While playing for the Army Phil Jackson was a centre in the same class as Bloddy Williams. Jackson could not double-link like Williams, but could shrug off opposition like a man licking ash off his trousers.

I have seen Mark Sullivan, when in the RAF, run a defence into the ground and score on his opposite wing, Sullivan and the coloured Billy Boston, an Army man, would have made any Union international team.

These men and others have given Services Rugby a class that will be missed badly.

Cornish slump

Future touring in Cornwall by club and representative sides at this time of season now hangs in the balance. With few exceptions, gates are falling, sometimes dangerously.

So far this season Redruth have entertained eight touring sides from England, Wales, and even Ireland. They have covered their expenses from only one of these matches.
